The Fight Against Breckinridge.

The unprecedented contest for Congressman in the Lexington (Ky.) district, is drawing to a close. There are three candidates in the field, viz: Col. Breckinridge, the present incumbent, and Messrs. Owens and Settle. The fight is chiefly against Breckinridge, and has been very bitter and personal, owing to his association with the Pollard woman. If the Owens and Settle factions could unite, they might win, but they seem to hate each other as intensely as they hate Breckinridge. Each candidate feels confident of success. Below are the figures claimed by each:

Mr. Kerens is himself a Catholic and a gentleman of high character and great influence. He expresses a determination to bring his resolution before the next Republican National convention, and thus force that body to show its hands. The Know Nothing organization of 1854-55 broke up the old Whig party, when the best men of that National party, especially in the South, cast their lot with the Democratic party after the anti-slavery crusade, which fo cultimated in the formation of the Re

Committee, appointed to investigate the charges of armor plate frauds by the Carnegie Company, has reported that the charges are true; that the Government has been the victim of a systematic plot, and that rotten armor plate has been furnished by this mammoth company for war vessels that are sent out to protect our country against unfriendly powers. It will now become the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Carnegie Company to the full extent of the law, and compel them to right the monstrous wrong they have done the country. This Company has made hundreds of millions of dollars out of the Govern-ment by means of the large and profitable contracts for armor plate, which were guaranteed to be bullet-proof, but when tested were found to be not much superior to common pot-metal. He is James Venney, a single man and he resides at 1533 Broadway. He is strong and muscular, as a result of the heavy work he did on Charles M. Edward's ice wagon. He had no premonition of evil, when last Saturday he started out with the ice wagon, seated head of Patrick McCke the dim. beside Patrick McCabe, the driver. They drove to Fifty-second street, east of First avenue, to secure a load from an ice supplying concern. The cakes of ice were carefully stored away, until it was estimated that the heavy wagon was la-den with 6,500 pounds. Then Venney mounted to the seat, while McCabe was concluding some negotiatiens connected

A QUEER CASE.

A New York Patient Whose Body

New York Herald.]

Like an Air Cushion.

The physicians of the Flower hospital,

at Sixty-third street and Avenue A, are intensely interested in a patient, whose case, they say, has few parallels in the medical history of the city. It is what the doctors call traumatic emphysema, with his purchase. Something, it is not known just what frightened the two big horses and the started to run, making a sudden lurch to the middle of the street. This threw Venney to the pavement and before he could recover himself a wheel of the wagon had passed diagonally over his body, from the left hip to the right shoulder, and he lay as one dead when Driver McCabe and others ran to his assistance. They could do nothing for im, and an ambulance from the Flower Dr. Holden, the assistant house surgeon of the hospital, drove to the scene, and lost no time in getting Venney to the institution. His face began to change color until it was almost a purple hue, his eyelids commenced to puff out, and there the gradiling continued to make it. then the swelling continued to make itself apparent down his neck and along his body to the waist, and down his arms to the wrists. A physician who tried to feel his pulse, finding a strange condi-tion, called attention to the fact, and then an examination showed that under the skin there was more than an inch Venney began to cough up blood, which ontinued for some time, and as his skin gradually became more and more distended his mind began to wander, and by nightfall he was delirious. There was really little that could be done for Venny except to watch him closely, so that should the air in the skin around the throat press the larnyx close together he should be saved from strangulation. Venney passed a bad ing all the time. The next day he complained that it was with great difficulty that he could breathe.
