Published five times a year in Summer, Summer/Fall, Fall, Winter and Spring by Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio 43022 [614] 427-2244. Second class postage paid at Gambier, Ohio. Printed by Printing Arts Press, Mount Vernon, Ohio 43050.

Those of us who live and work at Kenyon are easily caught up in the day-to-day busyness of campus life — classes, meetings, ceremonies, the paper chase of desk work, the daily round — so that we may lose sight of the larger shape of our activity, the life of the whole College over longer stretches of time. We need to stand back occasionally and look at where Kenyon has been and where the College is headed. This annual report at the beginning of a new decade offers an opportunity to review the progress of the College in the 10 preceding years and to gaze into the future, pondering our course in the 1980s.

One help in assessment of the present College in relation to its past is provided regularly by returning alumni, who contrast the campus and life on the Hill as they knew it with Kenyon as it is today. Most of them see a strong continuity between Kenyon then and Kenyon now in spite of all the changes and the dramatic growth in size and numbers.

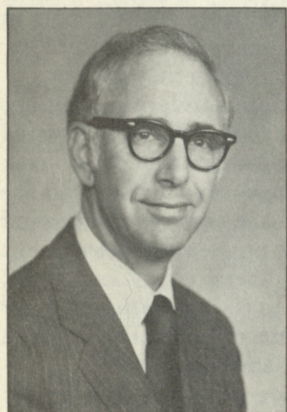

Growth was the leading theme in the '70s, growth carefully chosen, planned, and begun in the decade before and successfully carried to near completion in the decade just ended. We deliberately chose expansion as the means to survival, financial soundness and academic excellence. And we have accomplished growth in orderly and responsible fashion, building on the foundations of the past to preserve the best in Kenyon traditions and to adapt the collegiate organism to requirements of the present environment. Growth of one kind or another is the vital principle of good colleges as it is of healthy organisms.

Our growth in the '70s is readily measured by the enlargement of the student body, the addition of buildings and academic programs and the swelling of resources to support residential liberal education. By mid-decade, through the admission of women, which made the College more generally attractive and enhanced all aspects of our life, Kenyon achieved an enrollment of approximately 1450 men and women. Since then that size has held stable with a slow and steady increase in the numbers of women students, 43 per cent in the 1979-80 academic year. Enlargement was accomplished without diminution of quality but with lowering rates of attrition among students. And we continue to take pride in the competence of our graduates as they go on to further study or to the building of careers.

Since the '60s the campus grew to accommodate the larger student body and faculty. The dormitories and new commons were planned to provide the additional space needed as attractively and efficiently as possible and to offer a variety of housing and dining options. Samuel Mather Science Hall was renovated, and the new Biology Building was added. With extensive remodeling, Bexley Hall became the permanent headquarters for the rapidly growing art department. Rosse Hall was completely renovated to provide a fine concert auditorium as well as a new home for the music department. Additional classroom and office space for IPHS and for the history, anthropology/sociology, political science and English departments was made available in attractively remodeled College houses. Most recently came the long awaited construction of the new Bolton Theater. With the completion of the athletic/recreation/convocation center, now under construction, all of our major building requirements will have been met.

The careful expansion of facilities during the past decade has been matched by thoughtful attention to the academic program. A new department, anthropology/sociology, has been added. The experimental Integrated Program in Humane Studies has become a part of the curriculum. The department of modern foreign languages and literature has begun a program of revitalization by intensive instruction in languages. Through the Exeter Program Kenyon students can now work at the University of Exeter under the supervision of a member of the Kenyon faculty, and there has been increased interest in other options for off campus study. In the fine arts division, art and drama have experienced remarkable growth and the music department has begun a renaissance in performance and in its teaching program. The Public Affairs Conference Center has played a larger part in the education of Kenyon's political science students and of the College community as a whole. The new computer has added to the capabilities for research and teaching in the sciences. Programs in physics, chemistry and biology have expanded, and special attention has been given to the improvement of entry-level courses. To benefit students in all disciplines, a strong program of career counseling has been developed.

Kenyon became richer too in its financial foundations. Increased income from an almost doubled enrollment, coupled with careful economics and cost control, enabled the College to balance its budgets routinely, establishing a tradition of operations in the black that reached its tenth anniversary this year, an enviable and unusual record for a small college. Gifts to the College for buildings, endowment, special projects and assistance in paying our annual bills have grown vigorously. The 1979-80 academic year established a new high for total monies received, as this Honor Roll issue testifies, including a new record for the Kenyon Fund which once again surpassed its goal in alumni giving. Our fund-raising proceeds with energy and optimism thanks to devoted effort and loyal giving by the many generous alumni, parents and friends of the College whose contributions are recorded in these pages.

As the '80s begin Kenyon will undertake further growth but in a different mode from that of the decade of expansion. This decade will test what we have so far accomplished and bring its own kind of excitement. Our first task, of course, must be completion of the final step in our program of construction: new and renovated facilities and playing fields for athletics, recreation and convocation. Long-awaited and much-needed for the sake of healthful, balanced lives among members of the campus community, with benefit also to our good neighbors in Knox County, this project is now proceeding apace, with completion scheduled for the opening of College in 1981. With more than half of the needed funds already raised and a broad public campaign launched, we are well on our way. The end of an epoch in Kenyon's physical growth is almost at hand.

As we look to the future, it is the challenge of academic growth and enrichment in a College of stable size that will claim our central attention. In a decade of declining enrollments nation-wide, admissions must claim a primary priority. We shall seek not simply to preserve our present size but to grow more selective, attracting the ablest to seek entrance by an enlarging reputation for liberal education of premier quality in a residential setting suited to personal growth and academic achievement. We shall aim to make Kenyon even more widely known and even more highly esteemed. To achieve growth of this kind we need not grow away from the past but must grow better at being Kenyon.

At the heart of the academic enterprise is the vitality of the people who conduct it. To teach the talented students whom we shall gather in Gambier, a faculty of distinction is essential. We shall strive to keep here the exemplary teacher-scholars who now set the tone and standards for the Kenyon faculty and to select academic men and women of the first rank when new appointments are made. We must see to it that Kenyon's faculty salaries rank high among our peer colleges nationally and that ample opportunity for individual development in teaching, in scholarship and in contributions to the arts is offered at every stage of the faculty member's career. As Kenyon alumni and parents know, the College faculty are the key to our past, present and future success.

One requirement for growth in academic quality will be to improve the Chalmers Library in the '80s through additions to the collection and provision of added stack and study space. Another will be to nourish the academic program by fostering steady development of the new undertakings of recent years, evaluating all of our course offerings, with revisions when necessary, and strengthening areas in which we are weak, such as the study of cultures other than our own. In all of this the challenge will be to grow in quality without growing in size. This will put us on our mettle, calling for a clear vision of our informing purpose in liberal education and a special wisdom to pursue it without the capacity to innovate by adding.

In short, with the expansion of student body and faculty and of the physical campus accomplished, Kenyon will enter an exciting new phase of development. The decade ahead will call for high levels of creativity and energy as Kenyon continues to pursue excellence. Our inheritance and our accomplishments make us confident: a campus of charm and beauty, a strong academic program, a lively and studious student body, a distinguished faculty, a modern physical plant, fiscal responsibility, and the recent endeavors that reach beyond Gambier to spread Kenyon's intellectual and artistic influence: the Public Affairs Conference Center, the Kenyon Review and the new Kenyon Festival Theater. Backed by the strong support of our alumni, parents and friends, we are eager to move ahead together into the '80s.

What is the Magic of the Mountain?

by BRUCE HAYWOOD

To Kenyon alumni of the past quarter-century the phrase Magic Mountain refers both to Thomas Mann's great novel and to the peculiarities of life and learning on The Hill. Bruce Haywood played no small role in the perpetuation of this dual association. And so it came as no surprise that Haywood, in his final address as Provost before assuming the presidency of Monmouth [Ill.] College, chose once again to discuss the metaphorical connection between the Magic Mountain of Mann and of Kenyon.

In one of its February issues this year the Collegian carried a letter I found especially provocative, a letter from an angry student. I can't remember now why the writer was so annoyed and I'm not sure I knew then. Perhaps it was just being in Gambier in our cruelest month that drove him to tear his hair in public. Whatever the reason, he was led to charge that it was the College's public relations office which first called Kenyon "the magic mountain," in a characteristic effort to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear. I bristled at that and I think I must have begun then and there to compose some sort of response to that unhappy allegation. For when, a few weeks later, I was invited to address the graduating class, I knew immediately what my topic would be.

I can at once assure you that it was not the public relations office which first claimed the name of Thomas Mann's celebrated novel for Kenyon. Nor was I the one. The student who did is today a clinical psychologist in Minneapolis, but then he was a German major and one of a handful of students with whom I first worked my way through the complexities of that great work. We were not very far into its seven hundred pages when that perspicacious student began urging the rest of us to see that the village where Thomas Mann's hero discovers the essential truths of his humanity could be Gambier. (I'm rather confident that what set him off on his hunt for analogies was a sentence that tells the hero that the sanitarium he has come to is no ordinary institution. "Your ideas really get changed here," he is warned, in a forecast of the magical effect he will soon experience.) By now many of us have learned to look at Kenyon through Thomas Mann's eyes, none more lovingly than the student who produced an unforgettable yearbook, the Reveille of 1967, by juxtaposing photographs of Gambier and passages from Mann's text.

Anybody who reads The Magic Mountain while sitting on this hill will surely smile at instances of the amusingly familiar. For example, Thomas Mann tells us that the patients give up reading the newspaper and fail to write letters home, because they lose themselves in the gossip of the dining hall, in love affairs, or in the entertainments the management thoughtfully provides. Davos, the sanitarium, is a place where people argue passionately about world events while remaining at a safe distance from them. In Davos people consume great quantities of food, even while they complain about the eternal sameness of it. The weather on the mountain, always unpredictable, seems to have a strange authority over the institution's life. Those in charge try to conceal the fact that the doctors don't really cure anybody, though they go on charging very high fees and insisting that the patients, just by being in residence for a few years, will go home some day thinking themselves much better than they were when they arrived.

But happy little jokes about surface similarities will not explain the strength of conviction in those who have insisted that Gambier could be the locale for Mann's tale. They have seen more than superficial resemblances. Pushing beyond the novel's first level of meaning, they have come to understand that Mann was writing, not about the processes of disease, but about the processes of education — liberal education — and that the physical condition of those in the sanitarium has far less to do with the novel's theme than their spiritual sicknesses — self indulgence, apathy, and chauvinism.

Is there not, though, even if we grant that the deeper parallels are convincing, a considerable arrogance to our claiming for this little college the name of the novel often described as the most profound literary work of the twentieth century? I must admit that a few years ago I was very annoyed, outraged indeed, when I heard that out in California some fellow had created an amusement park, a thing of roller coasters and slot machines, and called that "The Magic Mountain." (What would we have thought of him, if he had called it "Harvard University"? Or "Kenyon College"?) But is our arrogance any less than his? Can't we be accused of a sleazy public relations trick, if, calling Kenyon the magic mountain, we have anything less in mind than the belief that here in Gambier there is a vision to match Thomas Mann's?

We can be absolved of the charge of arrogance, I think, if enough of us believe that the vision Philander Chase brought here is still alive. But that must depend primarily on student assessment of what goes on here, on this Ohio hill. Only if you, the College's true sons and daughters, cherish Kenyon as a place where people's ideas really do get changed, will you want to think of Gambier as the magic mountain. Otherwise the nickname can be no more than an inside joke, cute and self conscious. Dan Horowitz, dangerously neglecting his major in Political Science, struggled to produce his remarkable '67 yearbook in order to give form to the conviction he and his collaborators shared: that this is no ordinary college, no mere seat of learning. Dan and his coworkers wanted to proclaim what many a Kenyon graduate has attested to. They knew that their lives had been reshaped here and given purpose, and in Thomas Mann's novel they found the appropriate metaphor for their years in Gambier.

BRUCE
HAYWOOD

But another question presses itself upon me. Is the magic something that only a privileged few come to know? Thomas Mann celebrated Davos as a magic place, because its effect upon his protagonist is so extraordinary, so complete, as to defy rational explanation. Reasonable interpretation cannot account for the transformation Hans Castorp undergoes or for the influence certain persons and experiences have upon him. Mann prefers to call it magic, a sort of alchemy, a lovely mystery. Yet, in his meticulously composed preface to his novel, Mann is at some pains to stress that, while Hans Castorp is an altogether typical young man, his experiences on the mountain are peculiarly and privately his. Castorp's story, as Mann puts it, doesn't happen to everybody. Indeed, to some extent the magic of the mountain is of the hero's making. He is the catalyst, bringing the elements of the Davos world into an alchemical union with one another, creating gold out of what for others is only dross.

I shall take Mann's careful emphasis on the particular and private quality of his hero's experience as a warning to me not to generalize about the magic of Gambier that I have known. I shall let it remind me that each of you, like Hans Castorp, has lived an individual life upon the mountain and I shall not try to tell you what it has been. Instead, I shall tell you of the magic Hans Castorp found far from the flatland that gave him birth, the magic that transforms him from the naive youth the author calls "this still unwritten page" into the man his creator wants to think a hero for his time. Now I invite you, as you listen to Castorp's story, to set your own against it, judging whether you too have known a transforming and inspiring power that surpasses conventional explanation.

When first we meet Hans Castorp, on the novel's opening page, he is traveling by train across the heartland of Europe, where in earlier times Caesar's legions, Napoleon's citizens army, and Bismarck's Prussians had marched. Yet, as though to impress upon us that Castorp is no giant of history, Mann at once insists that his hero is a very average fellow indeed, a lad with no special gifts and no claim at all to be an intellectual. He is a particularly characteristic representative of the privileged upper middle class, more concerned with creature comforts than with what he might make of his life, more given to relaxing than hard work. We travel with Castorp along ravines and precipices as the train struggles up the mountain, until he alights in Davos expecting to find only a sanitarium where he will spend a few weeks being pleasantly pampered. He doesn't suspect that he has entered a drastically different world, separated from his home by a psychological and spiritual distance far greater than miles or altitude could account for. The sanitarium has its own calendar and celebrates its own holidays. The standards of the flatland — in language, manners, social relationships — are consciously abandoned and often mocked at. Davos is a self contained microcosm where the days and weeks take on uniform character, their passage marked only by mealtimes and the ritual exercises imposed on the patients. It must therefore be counted as a first instance of magic in the place that Hans Castorp, so much the child of his bourgeois parentage, eagerly embraces his new circumstances and unreasonably turns his back on the flatland, wondering that he had wanted no more from life than to make a comfortable living.

We must take it that it is Castorp's very naiveté and middle class blandness that attract to him persons who are intent on becoming his teachers. In his first months on the mountain he is exposed to minds so much more sophisticated than his own that he can only gasp at their brilliance. They show him new worlds beyond his imagining, seeming to conjure up the marvels of the universe and the glories of humanity's achievement before his eyes, new worlds which begin to demand his full attention and energy. Yet, with time, Castorp begins to see that these "teachers" cannot resist turning the unwritten page that he is into a bluebook. They are so convinced of the superiority of the life of the mind that they cannot imagine his wishing to embrace any other. Though they insist they want only to free him from the chains of his middle class prejudices, their behavior argues that they wish to make him the captive of their particular philosophy. But Castorp, having only recently learned the value of independence, resists them, sensing that there can be no single way to understand life in all its complexity. For very quickly, through another seemingly magical process, Castorp has grasped that the sanitarium, a place deliberately isolated from the flatland, can grant him an understanding of himself such as he would have never known, had he remained caught up in the dance of life down below. The distance and detachment afford a view of the world that is sometimes telescopic, sometimes panoramic, sometimes microscopic. So, as his teachers turn more and more to arguing the superiority of their particular positions, Castorp seeks the truths of his existence through private reading, observing, and thinking. And what he comes increasingly to understand, is that learning, when it is carried on for its own sake, moves people farther and farther away from the world and the concerns of ordinary humanity.

But it is to life, he recognizes eventually, that he owes his allegiance. For Thomas Mann finds ways to let his hero see, sometimes shocking him harshly with the recognition, that he and all the others on the mountain owe their advantaged position to the labors of those who toil down there in the flatland. It is not enough, Castorp recognizes in a magic moment, to view life through the peepholes created by biology, chemistry, history, economics, psychology, and all. He must accomplish a synthesis of those separate modes and then put his comprehensive understanding into the service of humanity.

That realization comes to Castorp in one of the most remarkable episodes in the novel, in a chapter called "Snow."

Until this moment Castorp has been overwhelmed by a chaos of information, blown this way and that by the strong winds of vigorous intellectual debate. He lacks a center of belief about which to organize his understandings; he has no compelling faith upon which to stand firm before efforts to overpower him with argument. Determined to think his way through his confusion, he seeks utter solitude on the snow covered heights above Davos, where he can be certain he will have no man's company. Up there he soon finds himself caught in a violent blizzard and unable, despite his best efforts, to find his way. Sinking into the deep snow, surrounded by the elemental powers of nature gone mad, he lies at death's door. And then there comes to him a dream, a vision of a sun-lit Mediterranean shore, a locale he is able somehow to identify as the cradle of our civilization. Even as he dreams, he recognizes that he is composing his vision, out of his experience on the mountain, and the synthesis becomes the vehicle for his triumphant recognition that the vital forms of our civilization — social, political, artistic — came into being in response to the cruel destructiveness of death. It is out of love for life, love for the ordinary human potential we glimpse in every child, that civilization has developed. And we best express our love for humankind, Castorp concludes, in the creating and recreating of those forms which support and enhance life.

That inspiring recognition rouses Castorp and he struggles up, out of the blanketing snow that threatens his little existence. Fully awake, he declares the central significance of his dream: it is love, not reason, that is stronger than death. Only in the forms that love creates does life triumph over death and take on importance. That faith Castorp eagerly voices, but by the time he reaches Davos the details of the dream have already begun to fade. It is as though Mann wished to say that Castorp's vision had been the product of a state not to be realized in daily living. It was a dream at the very edge of life, in an exalted state of simultaneous terror and reckless courage, born of the will to push to human limits in defiance of chaos.

What Castorp must now do — all that remains for him to do on the mountain, the action of the novel seems to say — is to find a way to translate the essential elements of his vision into a metaphor, a way of organizing all he has learned so that he may carry it with him always, in capsule form so to speak. He needs a symbol that will inspire him afresh whenever he faces death's agents — cynicism, nihilism, and barbarism — in the flatland.

So, in the next purely magical moment of the novel, we find Castorp standing before a new discovery; music — music on phonograph records, an ingenious wedding of the forms of art and technology that Mann calls "the German soul brought up to date." Out of the host of musical selections the management has provided, Castorp chooses a half dozen pieces which have a special significance for him, making them the distillation of his life on the mountain. One record evokes a particular person; another a special feeling; a third a crucial experience. But there is one record, a well-known ballad, which itself becomes the summation of the others, a magical representation of what his dream revealed to him. The song is simple love given permanent beauty by death-denying form and it is simultaneously the expression of his deep feeling of belonging to both the mountain and the flatland. In that song Castorp finds realized the essential paradox of the magic mountain: that the deepest affection for life he has learned at the greatest distance from it.

With Castorp having put Davos into his favorite song and made it portable, there is nothing left for him to learn or to dream upon the mountain. There is nobody to hold him there, no reason for him to remain. And yet he stays on. A reason to go the mountain cannot provide him. At this point magic seems to have no say. It is life, rushing along down below, that finally calls him home.

His reason to go is the outbreak of the Great War, for, as that explodes, Castorp recognizes that all he has learned to cherish in the name of life is threatened by the mad outburst of the elemental passions in mankind. All that he has celebrated in the simple word "goodness" — home, family, decency, love of beauty, and innocent happiness — seems about to be overrun, its fragile structures destroyed by tyrants and vandals. And now Castorp thinks on the words of the man who has been dearest to him of those who have tried to teach him: "Whoever is unable to offer his person, his arm, his blood, in the service of the ideal is unworthy of it. However intellectualized, it is the duty of a human being to remain a human being."

So Castorp goes home to the service of life, back to the flatland where once again the warring legions rage: destroying churches, closing colleges, burning books, and smashing phonographs. We last see him in the uniform of his people's army, an anonymous soldier on a nameless battlefield, moving with hundreds of his kind against a faceless enemy. Bullets fly and shells explode, the products of a perverted creativity, and with many of his fellows Castorp falls into the mud. But, as once before in the snow, he refuses to lie there and let death claim him. With the song on his lips that he has brought from the mountain, he gets up and charges the enemy, in the name of hope for a better world, of faith in love that is stronger than death. I quote Thomas Mann for the last time: "Up he gets and staggers on, limping on his earthbound feet, all unconsciously singing."

With that the story of Hans Castorp is told. Here his creator parts company with him, certain that, whatever befalls him, he will always fight for what Mann has chosen simply to call "goodness." There is in the end, The Magic Mountain says, something worth giving one's life for.

I have learned the truth of what Goethe once proposed as a paradox. Nothing, he said, can so alienate us from life as can literature. Nothing, he added, can more firmly bind us to life than literature can. And so it is with higher education. It can forever hold us aloof, content to look down upon life from the distance; clinical; contemptuous; calculating our advantage over the unsophisticated. But it can also return us to life able to love and serve it better, armed with the knowledge that our individual life takes on meaning and worth when it is given to the larger life of humankind.

Now time's onward rush has determined that your stay on Gambier's mountain is ended. The question is not whether you will stay or go. The question is what you will take with you. Will you take only the lofty view, the detached superiority your diploma will certify to? Or will you want to fight on behalf of those civilized forms through which humankind has sought to express its highest ideals and its best hopes for its children?

Go now, your College says to you, go to the flatland in Kenyon's name and let your years here sustain you in the fight.

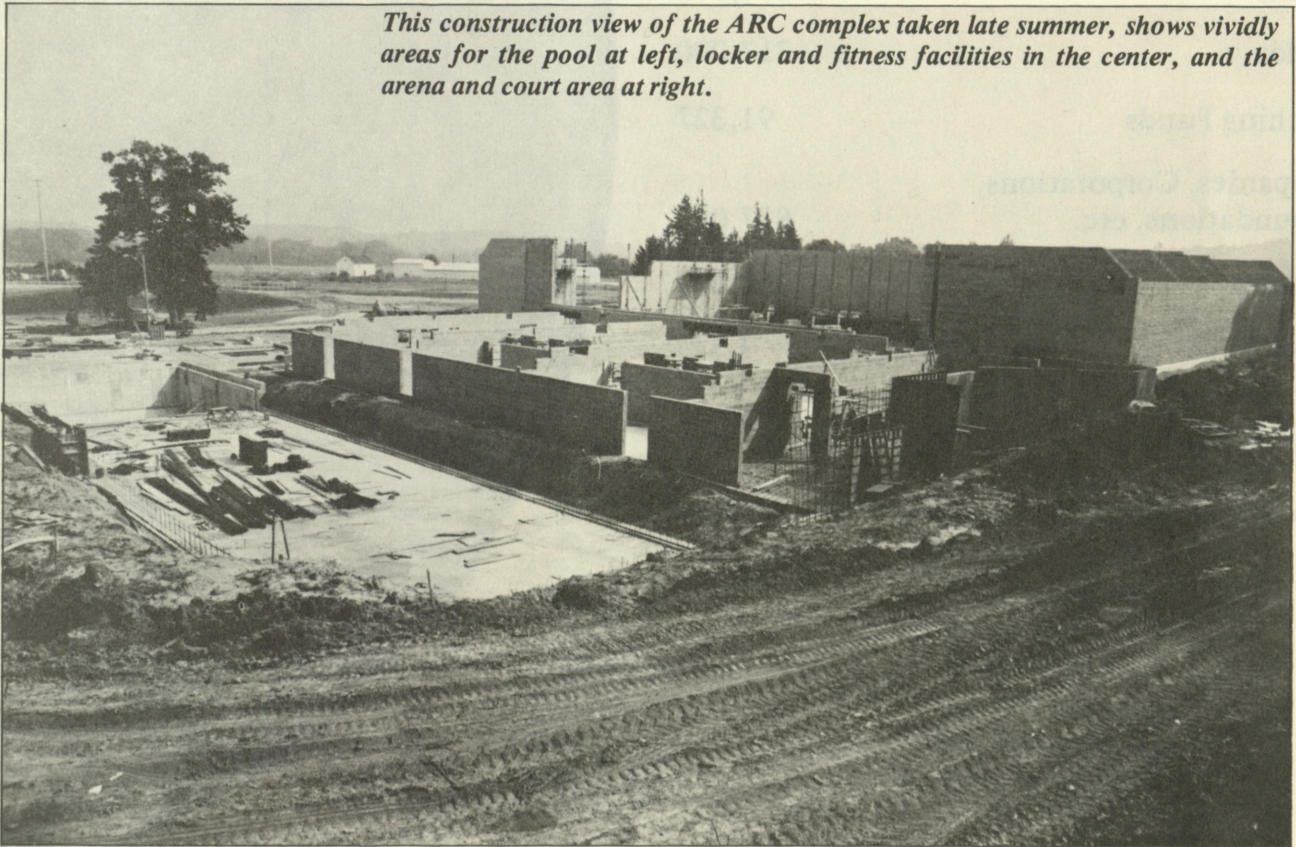

A Challenge Being Met

Bill Ranney '52
ARC Campaign Chairman

As you can see, ARC is rapidly becoming a reality. This thanks to the hard work and generosity of so many in the Kenyon family. It is an honor to serve as ARC Campaign Chairman. From this vantage point I have become more aware of the loyalty and dedication of Kenyon supporters. With the full commitment of the board of trustees and the development of a strong corps of alumni and parent volunteers, Kenyon is building a team that will serve it well for years to come.

I want to thank those of you whose generosity during Phase I has made possible the start of construction, and I look forward to meeting many more alumni, parents and friends of Kenyon during the campaign's equally critical second phase.

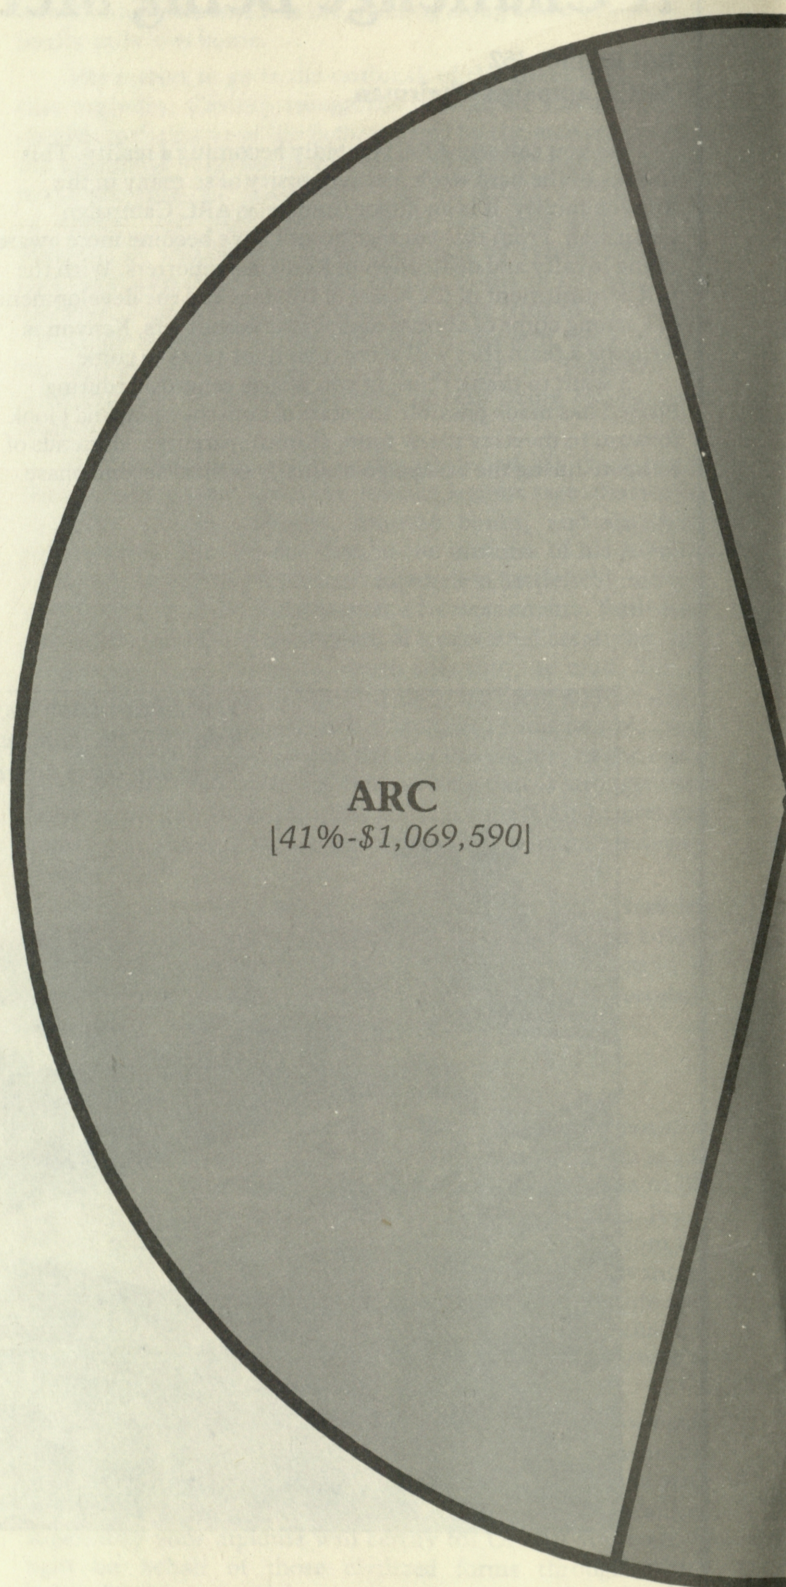

This construction view of the ARC complex taken late summer, shows vividly areas for the pool at left, locker and fitness facilities in the center, and the arena and court area at right.

The 1979-80 Kenyon Fund

PHILIP R. CURRIER '56
1979-80 Kenyon Fund Chairman

Dear Alumni:

I am extremely pleased to report that the Kenyon Fund has exceeded its goal of $400,000 for the 1979-80 year by $30,000.

When that goal was selected at the beginning of the drive, there was some concern that we might not be successful. $400,000 represented a 45 percent increase over the $294,000 raised in the previous year. And that was a good year, also! At least, we knew we were going to be asking a lot of the alumni group.

At the same time, the goal was not established simply to represent an ambitious target. It is a necessary part of the conscious and very strong commitment to place Kenyon at the forefront of the other excellent colleges in America (in terms of contributions from its alumni group). We think it's important that Kenyon be judged as highly in terms of the support given by its alumni as it is that the college be highly regarded academically. In order to achieve that, there has to be a continuing improvement in the percentage of alumni who contribute to the Fund, and in the size of the average contribution.

All of you should share our pride in this year's accomplishments. We have received contributions from 3,108 alumni, 44 more than last year. Our average gift this year was $136 versus $95 in 1978-79.

Two major elements in the success of the 1979-80 Kenyon Fund were the reunion classes and the phonathons. The 10 reunion classes raised more than $125,000 which represents more than 30 percent of the total contributed to the Fund. Of special interest in this area is the $50,000 raised by the Class of '30, this year's 50th reunion class. Led by Bill Caples, '30 has given more to the Fund than any other class and has set a target for all reunion classes. At the same time, the phonathons again had a successful year. More than $70,000 in pledges were solicited and, once again, the phonathons were responsible for the largest single block of contributors to the Fund.

The College and all of us who worked on this past year's drive thank you for your support.

As would be expected, Kenyon is not going to slacken its commitment to improving the Fund. Paul Zuydhoek, who will chair the 1980-81 Kenyon Fund drive, will be working toward a goal in excess of $500,000. Obviously, in order for us to keep this momentum going, each of you will be asked to again support the College.

I'm confident that you will respond to that challenge as you did this past year. We thank you for helping push the Kenyon Fund toward its leadership goal.

Phil Currier

Best regards,
Philip R. Currier '56

Alumni Volunteer Programs

Alumni Admissions Program

Organized over five years ago, the Alumni Admissions Program seeks to bring the name of Kenyon to the attention of college-age students and their parents. The program functions under the aegis of the Admissions Office, the Alumni Office and the Alumni Council.

The program works in two ways. In areas of heavy alumni concentration or in those that yield large numbers of student contacts, groups of alumni are organized with a chair to direct the activities. In areas where contacts are minimal or where few alumni reside, a single alumnus or alumna is responsible. Both aspects of the Program involve contacting students whose names are supplied by the Admissions Office, sending prospective students' names and addresses to the Admissions Office, representing Kenyon at college nights/fairs, functioning as liaison between the college and specific secondary schools, assisting admissions staff members when they visit the areas, participating in phonathons and helping to plan and assisting at parties and receptions.

This was an exceptionally successful recruiting year, with 258 alumni involved in the program, 41 group areas and 65 individual areas. Alumni conducted numerous parties, phonathons and interviews. They also participated in a special admissions Kenyon Today seminar last September.

With the total pool of college-age students decreasing, Kenyon must increase its efforts in order to continue to secure well-qualified students. Alumni can be actively involved in the college's future by being actively involved in the Alumni Admissions Program. If you would like to serve Kenyon in this way, contact the Admissions Office (Bettye York), the Alumni Office (Jeff Robinson) or the Alumni Council (Tom Sant or Spinner Findlay).

The Admission Office would like to thank the following alumni who represented Kenyon at college nights and college fairs during 1979-80:

Dick Baker '69, Nick Berberian '74, Tom Black '64, Mark Center '73, Elaine Couch '75, David Foote '66, Cathy Francis, Rosemary Furfey '76, Daryl Gernert '75, John Grillo '71, Mike Hirschfeld '73, Peter Hoover '71, Bill Hylton '64, George Letts '74, Bob MacIntyre '69, Donald O. Phonathon

In 1979-80 the Phonathons again played a vital part in the success of the Kenyon Fund. The Phonathons were responsible for the largest single number of contributors to the Fund. More than 1,800 alumni made gifts to the Fund which were the direct result of the Phonathons. Also, the amount of pledges received during the six week period (over $70,000) was more than that of the 1978-79 year. Listed below are the cities where phonathons were held and the names of those who volunteered their time and effort on behalf of Kenyon.

Alumni Council

The ambition of the Alumni Council, as the governing body of the Alumni Association, is to involve each alumnus, alumna, matriculate or friend of Kenyon in a variety of activities supporting the college. To this end, the council has established committees to oversee critical areas of alumni concern and programs to encourage participation in these functions. An innovative approach to the council and alumni trustee elections, developed last year, was used in the 1980 election of three council members and two trustees. Nominations were solicited from the Alumni Association at large, and the final selection was made through a competitive election. This open procedure encouraged a wide field of nominees and as a result a greater percentage of alumni voted.

This broader interest on the part of the alumni is also reflected in two of the council's major programs, Alumni Admissions and Career Counseling. The Alumni Admissions is discussed elsewhere in the Honor Roll. The Career Counseling program encourages students to explore career options with alumni already in the appropriate fields. This gives the students a chance to assess their career goals in light of practical experience, and to plan more realistically for their lives after Kenyon. The alumni employment biographies, reference material used to make these contacts, are also available to Kenyon alumni of any class year seeking location or career changes. Each year, five more cities are being added to increase the scope of the program, thereby ensuring a variety of geographic, vocational and chronological representation.

In addition to projects such as these, the council has led by example in sustaining the college's drive for growth in facilities and quality. Where the college did not need the council's manpower, the council lent its financial support. Every council member pledged a significant sum to the campaign for the new Athletic/Recreation/Convocation complex already under construction, and this year's Kenyon Fund received donations from the entire Council averaging more than $150 per person. In every way, the council's active service to Kenyon is reflective of the concerned involvement of the Alumni Association as a whole.

1979-80 Parents' Fund

STEPHEN E. GROSS
1979-80 Parents' Fund Chairman

Dear Parents:

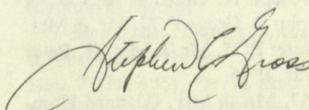

This year, the Parents' Fund achieved an excellent record with 705 contributions, the largest number since the Fund was started. The previous year there were 90 fewer, so that the 1979-80 Fund had almost a 15 percent increase in contributors.

Of course, the actual amount of money collected in the campaign is important, but so too is the number of contributors. It is hoped that the increase in contributors indicates an increasing awareness of Kenyon's need and an increasing commitment to the College for the future.

Our gifts totaled $92,113 which is the second largest amount in the Fund's history — second only to last year when there was the substantial Joyce Foundation matching grant. We should all be proud of the growth and accomplishment of this year's Parents' Fund.

Thank you for your continuing support.

Sincerely,

Stephen E. Gross

In Memory Of . . .

Increasingly, gifts to The Kenyon Fund and other funds are made "in memory of" a deceased alumnus or friend of the College. Those gifts to The Kenyon Fund are placed in The Kenyon Fund Endowment and the income produced by this endowment is credited to The Kenyon Fund each year. Several classes, through their agents, customarily send contributions to The Kenyon Fund in memory of classmates who have died during the year. Gifts are also received to establish memorial funds as part of the general endowment of the College.
