A 13th-Century Love Story Hidden in a Hat

The pages of this manuscript date from c. 1270, but were recycled in the early modern period to stiffen the lining of a bishop's mitre. The cloth pasted over it hid a Norwegian translation of Old French love poetry (so-called lais). Lovers chase each other through dark corridors, maidens frolic in fields, while knights butcher each other over nothing. For more information about this singular survival see here.
