Rob Oden looks back on a half dozen years as Kenyon's president—and forward to the challenges that lie ahead

During the "Claiming Our Place" campaign, President Oden made 295 visits to individual alumni and attended seventeen regional association gatherings, allowing him to become the "face of Kenyon" perhaps more rapidly than any of his predecessors. Before arriving at Kenyon in 1995, he had served as headmaster of the Hotchkiss School in Connecticut, and, prior to that, as a faculty member in the religion department at Dartmouth College in New Hampshire. A graduate of Harvard College, he studied at Cambridge University as a Marshall Scholar before returning to Harvard for his doctorate in Near Eastern languages and literatures.

On Monday, October 1, the Bulletin editor sat down with President Robert A. Oden Jr. He had just returned from a special meeting with the College's trustees, at which one of the primary topics for discussion was the College in the years following the "Claiming Our Place" campaign. It seemed a perfect time to engage him in conversation about his first six years in the presidency and his vision for the future.

Bulletin: What do you believe to be the most important achievement of the recently completed "Claiming Our Place" campaign?

A swift answer to that question, which I'll go beyond, would be the fact that the campaign achieved and exceeded its goal. When people, meaning primarily our fundraising consultants, said it would be a stretch to raise anything over $70 million, we said we'd go for $100 million anyway. In the event, we raised over $116 million. But I think, and especially because I want to stress that Kenyon's all about people and not all about money, I think the most important achievement is probably the transformation in our convictions about what could be done about the College's endowment.

Put rather simply, and as one of Kenyon's vice presidents first said to me, what the campaign has done is move Kenyon from a posture of "We cannot" to "We can." Now, we have had plenty of times in the past when we have responded with "We can." I wouldn't want to suggest that the College's previous leaders, from Philander Chase through Lorin Andrews through William Foster Peirce through Philip Jordan, haven't faced daunting challenges that others doubted could be surmounted and then surmounted them; that would be dramatically unfair. But there is a sense in which achieving ambitions, ambitions beyond the ken of most of us, is what this campaign was all about. I think that, throughout Kenyon's history, the response to needs has too often had to be, "We would like to do that but it's too much for us. We would like to do that, and our fellow colleges, our peer institutions, may be able to do that, but we simply cannot." We might have said that at the beginning of this campaign. "Because it will be very hard to raise more than $70 million, we cannot." Instead, we said, "We can." And we did.

Whenever I meet with graduates of the College, I say, with some frequency, "You are the stewards of the College's future." I think that a signal achievement of the campaign was that of meeting with an altogether atypical number of graduates, not only in groups but largely individually, and convincing them that Kenyon College is the only alma mater they are ever going to have and our future in many ways lies in their hands. That kind of greatly enhanced communication between Kenyon and those who graduated from the College is an achievement of the campaign, and I hope that it's one that lasts long beyond the campaign.

Bulletin: You've been an extraordinarily effective fundraiser for Kenyon. How do you make the case for the College and its needs to prospective donors?

Because the College is chiefly about people and not about money, as I've said before, it's there that I begin making the case for Kenyon's needs, for gifts to the College. Making that case is not overly difficult; people realize that Kenyon competes, and competes successfully, for students and for faculty members with colleges and universities that have much, much bigger endowments. So I say we need, in order to attract and keep those kinds of talented students and faculty members, and then to set them free to learn and teach and work at the College, which is what the promise of Kenyon is, we need increased funds, across the board. That case is not hard to make.

What I very quickly do, in talking with graduates of the College, is ask them questions, almost always asking them to remember their first year at Kenyon, and their advisor, and it's usually the advisor, or a faculty member who meant the most to them when they were in the first year at the College. Then I move on, asking them to consider who, in all four of their years at Kenyon, made the biggest difference to them. This, because the College is, has been for a long time, a galaxy of great teachers, this usually leads to long, thoughtful, and often emotional responses. "Franklin Miller, Gerrit Roelofs, Owen York, people like this changed my life, and changed my life for the better, and now that you've asked me, I've remembered them again."

I mean it when I say that Kenyon is "learning in the company of friends," that the context of learning here is one of competition for the truth, of seeing one's fellow students as allies, and that the context of friendship leads to discoveries that might not otherwise have been made. Given that all of that is the case, I also ask graduates to tell me who were their closest friends at the College and whether they remain in touch with them. The answer to that, again, with many people, and with pleasing frequency, is that they do keep in touch with those friends.

If there's a likely connection between what a donor may be able to do and what Kenyon needs, then talking about that is what I try to do. If we want endowed chairs for the faculty, I return to what individual faculty members meant to them. If it's financial aid, I say, with certain conviction, "Imagine fulfilling a dream for a highly talented student who doesn't have the financial resources to attend the College."

Again, I ask people questions and get them to talk about their time at Kenyon; my role is chiefly that of conversational partner and questioner. It is as people talk about their time at the College, what teachers meant to them, what friends meant to them, what a coach like Jim Steen or a dean like Tom Edwards meant to them, that they convince themselves of how Kenyon changed their lives and how important it is for them to give something back to the College.

Bulletin: Do you enjoy fundraising?

I think it's among the most enjoyable aspects of being a college president. I say that, not wishing to mock any of my colleagues, because I know a lot of presidents say fundraising is not their favorite thing.

What is difficult, what is not fun about it, is the traveling. Not the being there, of course. Once one is in New York City, or Chicago, or San Francisco, meeting with graduates is immensely enjoyable. But having to spend the night in La Guardia, having to stand in lines that have always been long and now, after September 11, seem endless, that's not fun. And I don't think there's anyone telling the truth who would deny that traveling is very tiring, so that part of fundraising is obviously not among the happiest things I do, though I do get an awful lot of reading done, on airplanes. I cannot do what I do as a human being and as a college president without reading all the time, so having that time helps.

What is most enjoyable about fundraising, I think I would say, are two things. First, and most important, an awful lot of the people who can and do help Kenyon the most are extraordinarily intelligent

"If there's a likely connection between what a donor may be able to do and what Kenyon needs, then talking about that is what I try to do. If we want endowed chairs for the faculty, I return to what individual faculty members meant to them. If it's financial aid, I say, with certain conviction, 'Imagine fulfilling a dream for a highly talented student who doesn't have the financial resources to attend the College.'"

President Oden sets out on his morning commute across Middle Path—from Cromwell House to Ransom Hall.

"I began the whole [curriculum review] process during my first faculty meeting, in September of 1995, saying, 'Just as the unexamined life is not worth living, the unreflected-upon curriculum may not be worth teaching.' My least favorite aphorism is, 'If it ain't broke, don't fix it.' That suggests that going along on a mediocre keel is O.K. We had a fine curriculum; it wasn't in any way broken. Even so, we asked ourselves, 'Does it need fixing?'" and interesting. I'm almost always meeting with creative people, often courageous people, and hearing their stories is just invigorating.

My former colleagues, from the days when I was a professor of ancient and Near Eastern languages and religions, will often say, "Rob, how can you like what you're doing, when you're not reading The Flood Myth of Atrahasis in Akkadian and not translating Ugaritic texts?" One of my responses is, "It's at least as much fun as those things are, there is at least as much fun to be had in meeting with interesting and smart people." I've learned an awful lot about how MTV works, for example, and about how venture capital works, about how the chief executives of large companies see the challenges and rewards of what they do. That's just immensely interesting to me.

Second, the reason it is fun is the sense of competition. I think all of us who've had the honor of moving into positions of increasing responsibility are awfully competitive. There's no doubt that I simply like and enjoy winning. I enjoy fundraising because it's measurable and tangible.

Of course, one does have non-successes, with people who could and should give and with people who are just not able to give for one reason or another. But far more often in the "Claiming Our Place" campaign it's been the opposite: those who cannot give a lot, and some of those who almost could not, have given a significant part of their total wealth. And those are competitive victories, in the best sense, for the College.

Bulletin: Your administration has been responsible for the most comprehensive examination of Kenyon's curriculum in more than twenty years. What do you think the results of that review, including the adoption of language and quantitative reasoning requirements, say about the College?

I think the single most important thing they say is that the spirit of cooperation, the spirit of learning from one another and from current and past students, is alive and well in the faculty. Which is to say, even before I get to the specific curricular changes, what actually says the most about Kenyon is that the faculty met in committees over a three-year period, held symposia to discuss the various suggestions, and then, in the end, voted to approve the final group of recommendations by a four-to-one margin. That kind of joint, collaborative, consultative trust that faculty members show to one another and in their colleagues I think says the most about the College.

Secondly, the changes we made demonstrate that Kenyon is always willing to ask itself, "Is this the best we can do?" There was nothing particularly sick about our curriculum, we weren't talking about a patient who needed immediate surgery or anything like that, but it was a curriculum that had not been systematically reviewed for a couple of decades. I began the whole process during my first faculty meeting, in September of 1995, saying, "Just as the unexamined life is not worth living, the unreflected-upon curriculum may not be worth teaching." My least favorite aphorism is, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it." That suggests that going along on a mediocre keel is O.K. We had a fine curriculum; it wasn't in any way broken. Even so, we asked ourselves, "Does it need fixing?"

Another important thing that the curriculum review says about the College is that we are able and willing to engage and to learn from Kenyon's graduates. I can't claim to speak comprehensively about a lot of curriculum reviews, but I don't know of any that took the early thinking of their curriculum review committee as swiftly and as comprehensively as we did to our graduates. The Alumni Council worked on it over several sessions, and at many regional gatherings, individually and in groups, I mentioned it, so the alumni body was well aware that we were doing this.

I was struck by the frequency with which the alumni mentioned the very requirements that in the end the faculty approved—that is to say, proficiency in a foreign language and in quantitative reasoning. Now, I have to admit those were favorites of my own, so from the very beginning I was hopeful that we would have those proficiency requirements, and that may be partly why I heard what I did from graduates. But it's decidedly true that alumni embraced the quantitative-reasoning requirement. Lots and lots of graduates said to me, "The last math course I took was in high school. I didn't take one at Kenyon because I didn't have to take one." And then they went on to say how they regretted that, not so much because they had lost fluency in quantitative matters as because they had lost confidence in their abilities, that they had, in some cases, begun to fear the quantitative. So what would have helped them most was not even perhaps the specific things learned in taking a math course at Kenyon, but the confidence gained in taking a college math course and doing just fine. I think those things are what the results of the curriculum review should say about the College.

Bulletin: In your "Vision for Kenyon College," you stressed the "experience of difference" as an essential area of concern and focus for Kenyon. How much progress do you think the College has made in this area, in recruitment of students and faculty members and in language instruction?

It never is as much progress as any of us would have most wished for, nor enough progress that any of us would wish to say the job is done. I used the phrase in my "Vision for Kenyon," and will continue to use the phrase "the experience of difference," because I think the words diversity and multiculturalism have been used and overused, politicized and overpoliticized, to such an extent that they've lost much of their native semantic significance. The phrase I use is "the experience of difference" to stress that it is from the experience of difference that we learn the most: the exposure to different arguments and different ways of phrasing arguments and presentations of evidence that come from interaction with people of vastly different backgrounds. I think "the experience of difference" expresses this broader meaning better than either diversity or multiculturalism.

Where we have had much our greatest success is in the recruitment of faculty members, and here we owe an immense amount of gratitude to Kate Will, the provost under whom we began this work, and to our current provost, Ron Sharp, the John Crowe Ransom Professor of English, who has worked astonishingly hard on this, and the chairs of academic departments who have recruited new colleagues over the past several years. Our simple message has been, and continues to be, to academic departments recruiting visiting and tenure-track faculty members, "The world is full of talented candidates. Make sure that you've looked in the right places, and keep looking, keep calling, keep writing. Are you sure there isn't an immensely talented person at a university where we may not normally think of looking who is, in fact, as good as there is in the country?" There are numbers of talented people now on our faculty whom we might not have come upon if we hadn't looked as hard as we did.

We are very careful, and I think wisely so, not in any sense to number our American minority faculty members, or students for that matter, as we recruit or search and then hold them up as triumphs. These are immensely talented human beings, people we'd be pleased to have join our community under any circumstances. But with that caveat, just a few years ago we had only a small handful; there was a point when we had just two continuing tenure-track African-American faculty members. Now, the number is over a dozen. When Fay Vincent, the former commissioner of baseball, whom I got to know from my time at Hotchkiss, visited Kenyon last year, he met a lot of students and faculty members. Fay said to me, "I just can't help but noticing the strides you've made towards getting a greater variety of faculty members than I've seen at other colleges." And I think Fay's right; the results of our labors are simply extraordinary.

While we have made some progress with regard to minority students, our overall percentage of minority students is about today where it was five or six years ago. That's been disappointing. It's not because Dean of Admissions John Anderson and his office haven't tried and tried again, or because they haven't had many successes, because they have. I do think over time our great success in recruiting so many, such a greater variety, of faculty members is going to pay dividends and help us with the students. The numbers of African-American and Latino students have been acceptable, but they have not reached the levels we would like. The number of Asian-American students has been dramatically disappointing.

I'm pleased you asked me the question about language instruction, because I'm convinced that whatever is the second most important, the second most productive and fruitful way to get into a different mind or to learn a different way of making sense of the world, whatever that second most important way is, becoming fluent in another language is so much the most important way that I almost don't care what the second is. The greatest way to achieve an appreciation of what is normally called either diversity or multiculturalism is to become fluent in another language. Everything else, I think, pales in significance by comparison. The fact that we now have a foreign-language proficiency requirement I do think is a very significant opportunity for us to stress the importance of appreciation of difference in a liberal-arts education.

Bulletin: Kenyon has experienced a number of tragedies involving students in the past several years. How do you think these have affected the College?

For our size, there is no doubt that motor-vehicle accidents, illnesses, and the worst violence have visited Kenyon with altogether atypical frequency. I was talking recently with the dean of students at a college very much like Kenyon, and he said that in the last six years they'd had one serious accident, but that's all. And this is a college slightly larger than Kenyon.

Tragedies of these sorts happen, in the lives of any college or university, over time. In an article I wrote for the Bulletin on forgotten moments in Kenyon history, I talked about a tragic period in the mid 1950s, when, in an astonishingly short period of time, an astonishingly high number of students, faculty members, and administrators, including President Chalmers himself, died. And we had the Old Kenyon fire in 1949, and just think what nine students alive and well, vibrant, one afternoon, nine students out of less than five hundred students, dead the next morning, would have done to the College. Around the turn of the century, a fire at the Kenyon Military Academy killed three students, and the infamous death of Stuart Pierson, connected to a fraternity initiation, occurred at about the same time. So it has happened before.

To pretend that these have not had an effect on the College would be to ignore the obvious, and at our peril. In the first instance, they've all had a deep and lasting effect because we all feel grieved and enormously sad together. If in the broader world there are six degrees of separation and no more, I don't think any of these tragedies has allowed for more than one degree of separation. We all either knew the students involved, and sometimes knew them well, or we knew students or faculty members who regarded them as great friends. Emily Murray, the student who was killed a year ago, I met before she took her first class, because I helped her and her family move her into her first-year residence hall. A student, a real student leader, a great student leader, who died of cancer after a long and courageous battle, Melissa Kravetz, came to my every office hour, I think, her first year at Kenyon, not only to get to know me but also to tell me what was wrong and what needed fixing and how it had to be fixed tomorrow and how I had to be the one to fix it.

While the recent deaths affected all of us, what has been most remarkable to me is the way the College as a community both reached out and pulled together. Every one of these tragedies has demonstrated that small communities, and maybe small communities alone, deal with, cope with, and incorporate these tragedies into their lives but rebound from them and move ahead without forgetting. Jim Steen, at the memorial service for Molly Hatcher, the student who was killed in a Kenyon van accident, gave probably the most moving memorial address I've ever heard. The thesis, the theme of the address, was that we must move on without forgetting. That to move on and forget would be as wrong as to remember and not move on. That we can at once remember and move on the College community has demonstrated repeatedly, most recently in the wake of the September 11 events, when we had a week's worth of memorial and prayer services and then moved on, in our tradition, to an all-campus gathering to talk about things that matter, in a way that reminded us what a Kenyon education is all about.

"What the ratings cannot fully assess, but what many people know, is the academic quality of the College. Look at the academic ratings for Kenyon and you'll see they're very high, much higher than some of our competition with much larger endowments. I can think of half a dozen colleges right now that have endowments of $500 million dollars or more that would love to trade those endowments for the College's student body or its faculty."

President Oden stops to talk with a prospective Kenyon parent in the Norton Room.

Bulletin: More and more, statistics seem to govern institutions' reputations. How can Kenyon "stay in the game" when our endowment, one of our most important statistics, at least for survey purposes, lags behind those of the institutions we consider our peers, even after the remarkable growth of the past few years? Even if we sometimes view them with dismay, publications like U.S. News and World Report do rank and categorize a number of important characteristics. But what's hardest to rank, in many ways, is the personal talents and abilities of faculty members and students, and we are confident that, for Kenyon, they would be near the top of any ranking. In fact, what most distinguishes the College is the talent and ability of our faculty members and our students.

With regard to those rankings that concentrate on numerical data, there is no doubt that our endowment and the percentage of alumni who give every year are the two areas in which the College is most hurt. We are competing for faculty members and students with colleges that have endowments averaging four to six times ours, and we are competing for faculty members and students with colleges whose average alumni participation rates are 50 percent and above, while ours remains in the forties and some years in the lower forties at that.

One thing that helps us a lot is the success of the Kenyon Fund and the Kenyon Parents Fund. If the percentage of participation in the Kenyon Fund is a little bit disappointing, the dollars given both to the Kenyon Fund and to the Kenyon Parents Fund, well, there really is no word except astonishing. The combined total of the two is close to $4 million annually right now, and there are colleges many times our size that would love to have annual funds of that size. Given that our endowment spending formula is 4 percent, $4 million in annual gifts to the College is the equivalent of one hundred million dollars in endowment, so we do very, very well there.

What the ratings cannot fully assess, but what many people know, is the academic quality of the College. Look at the academic ratings for Kenyon and you'll see they're very high, much higher than some of our competition with much larger endowments. I can think of half a dozen colleges right now that have endowments of $500 million dollars or more that would love to trade those endowments for the College's student body or its faculty. So in lots of areas we do very well. We think that, in any comprehensive sense, Kenyon is among the finest colleges anywhere, but there is no doubt that the still-lagging endowment and the continuing disappointment of the participation rates in the Kenyon Fund hurt us.

Bulletin: Kenyon's facilities for music and the sciences have been transformed as a result of the campaign. What do you see as the College's most pressing facilities needs in the next five to ten years?

It's well known, but perhaps worth repeating, that when William Nelson Cromwell gave the second of his very significant gifts to Kenyon [the first was Cromwell House, the president's residence] and Peirce Hall was built, President Peirce said that it was the last facility the College would ever need. Of course, we have needed lots of them since then. I know that some Kenyon graduates may find it difficult to believe that what we need now, most pressing, are greatly expanded facilities for fitness, recreation, and athletics, because to some people it may seem like we built the Ernst Center and Tomsich Arena just yesterday. But time passes swiftly, and we in fact built the Ernst Center and Tomsich Arena two decades ago.

I think the healthiest lifestyle change in the last couple of decades in America has been the increased passion for lifelong fitness and exercise. One just didn't used to see people running, lifting weights, and using exercise equipment the way they do now. When I was an undergraduate, the people who did that were varsity athletes, and almost no one else did that; I was not a varsity athlete, so I didn't do that, and I didn't start running until some years later. People now, young people, undergraduates, faculty and staff members, realize the importance of lifelong fitness, and we simply don't have the beginning of the kinds of facilities we need to offer them. So our first facility need is what we're going to call a Kenyon campus center, because it will be a center not only for fitness, recreation, and athletics but a center for campus life as well. We are going to construct down below the hill, in the area where Wertheimer Fieldhouse is, and to the south of Wertheimer, a fieldhouse, likely a new natatorium, and increase by a vast amount the number of square feet we devote to exercise, a weight-lifting area, and allied activities. Along with that, we hope to get indoor tennis courts. We hope to plan for the decades ahead in building this new campus center, to construct something that's not lavish or luxurious but that recognizes that the fitness habit in American life today is not a transitory one.

There are two needs that will be most pressing after fitness, recreation, and athletics. The first is student residences and accompanying student social spaces. We're not going to increase the size of the student body, so we need and want new residences and social spaces not because we're going to have more students but because we want more flexibility. We want to make sure that the kind of housing that's the most conducive to living and learning together is what we have, and that will require some work. What we are never going to build is a single, large student union or the like at the College. The new fitness and recreation center will have eating areas and areas that are like those that some institutions put in a student union, but I think Kenyon is the kind of place that needs lots of smaller social areas, like the Red Door Café. Whatever we decide to do with the old Peoples Bank building, it's likely to be something that will address the need for student gathering and social spaces. I would say we probably need residence halls that give us another sixty to eighty beds, and allied social spaces, to achieve our desired level of flexibility.

Finally—and this is likely to be the centerpiece for the next campaign, so it's some time off—we hope to build a fine arts center, somewhere near the heart of the campus, although it's still very much in an early phase with the faculty. The campus master plan, originally done about a dozen years ago now, recommended that we consolidate academic facilities near the center of campus and move nonacademic facilities to the periphery of the campus, which is exactly what we're doing. It's why, for example, we're building the Eaton Center for the Finance Division, including human resources and the Philander Chase Corporation, toward the north end of campus, so that Walton House, where those facilities are now, can be turned over to the English department's creative writing program and the Kenyon Review. That same master plan would suggest that the visual arts should have a place near the center of campus, and we don't know exactly where that will be, but I'm guessing the area between Peirce and Shaffer and Bolton would be a good place for a large and significant center for the fine arts, perhaps to include an art gallery. That would allow us then to consider new uses for Bexley and Colburn, and I have some ideas about them that I've had fun thinking about. I'd like to turn them into residence halls, so that they on the north balance Old Kenyon to the south. And the Mayer Art Center, wonderful facility that it is, was built with flexibility in mind, so there are lots of different social uses, perhaps even an extension of exercise facilities, to which it can be put.

Bulletin: Have you been able to find time to keep up with your academic interests?

Certainly less narrowly than I have before, since what I taught were Near Eastern languages and religions. To keep up with them, in the full sense, requires more than several hours a day reading Hebrew, Ugaritic, Akkadian, Syriac, Greek, the different languages that I used to teach, and one's facility and fluency with those kinds of languages simply goes if he or she doesn't keep it up. So, in the narrow, technical sense, I cannot claim to be at the peak of my abilities. I certainly keep up with my reading, though, in two senses: I keep up in a less professional and specific range with what's going on in ancient and Near Eastern studies. What I mostly do, however, and it means in a sense that I'm doing my own liberal education all over again, I read as much as I ever did as a faculty member, but I read more broadly. I don't think I would have read Robert Caro's The Power Broker, about Robert Moses, or his biography of LBJ. I don't think I would have read the recent biography of Joe DiMaggio or the book called Great Books by David Denby, a former film critic for New York magazine, who went back and took a "great books" course at Columbia and then wrote about it.

So, in many ways, I feel less expert on the ancient Near East than I used to, but I feel more genuinely, and generally, well read than I have since I was an undergraduate. And as I mentioned earlier, the ways in which I am able to do that are that I can read a lot while flying and that—and I tell students about this—I have a discipline about reading. It doesn't matter how busy the day is. I always read the New York Times. Every week, although I get a little behind from time to time, I read the New Yorker, and I read something worth rereading. I read a biography, historical most often, sometimes fiction, the Kenyon Review, for an hour or two every day, no matter how busy I am. I think that's important, and I tell students they should feel guilty if they don't do that.

Bulletin: How do you escape the stresses of the presidency?

Overwhelmingly, by running. There are many other ways, but I've always run. Every year I'm a president, I run a little bit slower but a little bit longer. I happily ran to Howard and back yesterday; that's probably a little over ten miles. I won't get into what time I ran it in, because it wasn't very fast. Interestingly, I run not just because exercise feels good, and not just because I think well while I'm running,

"We want to distinguish Kenyon and we want the world to know what a distinguished college Kenyon is. I'm using distinguished in two different senses: first, I mean what is most distinctive about Kenyon and how do we persuade potential applicants and potential faculty recruits; second, how can we make sure that Kenyon continues to be a distinguished college in the sense that it is the finest college it can be."

and I hope I don't sound antisocial, but presidents don't have a whole lot of time to be alone, and some time alone every day with my own thoughts is really important to me, and running provides that.

When there is time, I fish. I'm a passionate, lifelong fanatic about fishing, and I'm reasonably well-published as a fly-fisherman. If you've been fly-fishing for forty-five years, as I have, and fly-tying for more than forty-five years—I was tying trout flies even before I was first able to fish for trout—you get pretty good at it. I spend about eight days a year fishing for Atlantic salmon in New Brunswick, and I get to fish for trout in and around Hanover, New Hampshire, when we're there, a lot less time than I used to as a faculty member at Dartmouth, but that was the fishing phase of my career.

Bulletin: What has been the achievement of which you're most proud?

If I had to pick one, I think it would be the success we've had in recruiting new members of the faculty, many of them American minorities who've contributed significantly to the "experience of difference" at Kenyon. Minority recruitment is a big challenge, and there were a lot of people who said a small college in east-central Ohio couldn't do it, but by persistence and hard work we have done it.

Close to that is the success of the "Claiming Our Place" campaign. That, too, was a daunting challenge, for there were many who said that was unthinkable. We were, of course, very fortunate in the timing of the campaign. We would have been supremely blessed if we'd started and ended the campaign eighteen months earlier, but still, for the most of the campaign, a lot of the world financial markets were very supportive. The number of Kenyon graduates who did as I asked them to do and added a zero to what they were thinking of giving was immensely gratifying. It is literally true that a gift of $5 million to the campaign began as a commitment of five hundred thousand, and there were others like that. The campaign took a lot of hours, and a lot of imagination, so I'm awfully proud of that.

If you'd asked, "Is there one event during your time at Kenyon of which you are most proud?" I would say it was the nearly week-long celebration of the Negro Leagues and the integration of Major League baseball that former commissioner Fay Vincent and I worked on last spring. I knew Fay from before I went to the Hotchkiss School, and he had been on the board there. When Fay was the Major League commissioner, it was he who extended medical benefits and pensions to the veterans of the Negro Leagues, even if they had not made it to Major League baseball.

Fay and I had talked for years about bringing the surviving veterans to the College, and we finally did it for four or five days toward the end of April. Joe Black, Larry Doby, Slick Surratt, the sports journalist Claire Smith, and Fay met with students and faculty members, in large groups and small groups, in classes and symposia. I think Kenyon students began to learn that what's often called segregation is really apartheid and that these veterans of the Negro Leagues, and people like Joe Black and Larry Doby, who were among the first to integrate Major League baseball, were real heroes, heroes from whom we need to hear the stories and to hear them personally.

Bulletin: Tuition increases remain a concern for parents and students. What do you foresee as the level of increases over the next few years? What is Kenyon doing to keep costs down?

There is at Kenyon a long tradition of stringent budget discipline and of offering as fine an education as we know how to provide at a fair price. For much of the 1990s, we attempted to keep, and succeeded in keeping, tuition increases close to the rates of inflation. During the past several years, our increases in tuition and other costs have exceeded inflation, chiefly because of the costs associated with our new facilities (Storer Hall for music, the Philip Mather Science Quadrangle, Eaton Center, the academic building at the Brown Family Environmental Center, the new Horn Gallery, and more) and because of those costs associated with increasing the number of faculty to ensure that the tradition of close personal attention from Kenyon faculty members continues, is even enhanced.

Two examples of the ways in which we have controlled costs of late merit special attention. First, we are now in the fourth year of our successful merger of what were two College divisions, the library and Information and Computing Services, into one, Library and Information Services. This has meant not only financial efficiencies but also, and more importantly, our moving where, I am convinced, most colleges and universities will move soon, toward a single source to which students and faculty members will turn for research needs. Secondly, Kenyon was a founding member of the Ohio Five, a consortium of fine liberal-arts colleges, which allows us to share library resources and eliminate duplications within our collections. We have also shared technological resources and realized economies through purchasing group insurance, for example.

We are just now engaged in another important round of budgetary deliberations, discussions made the more challenging because of current economic conditions. As before, we will continue our habit of disciplined spending, and it remains our hope that increases in tuition can be kept closer to the rate of inflation.

Bulletin: Kenyon's setting has been threatened by the development sweeping north from Columbus. How successful has the College been in its efforts to secure the local environment? Are there plans to continue to purchase contiguous lands as they become available?

Among the signal successes of the past several years has been the formation of the Philander Chase Corporation, which under the most able leadership of former vice president for development Doug Givens has worked toward ensuring the preservation of Kenyon's rural character. Doug and the board of the Philander Chase Corporation have recommended the purchase of many acres of land, which the College now owns and hence acres whose future we now control. We are always assessing many pieces of land in and around Gambier, and will make future land purchases when we can afford these and especially where such land is judged to be critical to maintaining the beauty and character of Gambier.

Bulletin: To what challenge are you most looking forward in the years ahead? I think continuing to describe and then to provide what is necessary to achieve what Kenyon needs as a distinguished college. That is to say, we want to distinguish Kenyon and we want the world to know what a distinguished college Kenyon is. I'm using distinguished in two different senses: first, I mean what is most distinctive about Kenyon and how do we persuade potential applicants and potential faculty recruits; second, how can we make sure that Kenyon continues to be a distinguished college in the sense that it is the finest college it can be.

I have said before that I think what's most distinctive about Kenyon is "learning in the company of friends," that the College is a place not only where students and faculty members are as talented as they are anywhere but also where they're not afraid to be friendly with one another, where there's competition for the truth rather than against one another. I think Kenyon is also distinguished and distinctive in the high regard we have long paid to writing, and I don't just mean in the English department. Kenyon is a college where writing matters, in biology and mathematics and anthropology and physics, and also in English and in classics, and continuing to emphasize that and to make sure the world understands that message is important.

The second part of that is to continue to marshal, to secure and to marshal, the financial resources to make that possible. We are about talented students, we're about a college where people can be competitive for the truth, we are a college where the idea matters. All of these things need increased and continuing financial support. But we can't start a new campaign tomorrow. We have asked so much of so many in this astonishingly successful campaign, yet the number of donors who gave most to the campaign is quite small. Twenty donors gave more than 50 percent of the campaign total; we can't go back to those people again soon. So I'm not talking about a campaign, but in the period between now and the next campaign, we will continue to have to be ambitious in what we ask of people. We're going to continue to have to ask alumni to be stewards of the College, to do all they can to continue to support us.

Bulletin: What are your plans for the future?

Continuing to do what we have been doing. There's a sense in which the end of the campaign might have meant, and might mean, less travel and less of a national voice for me, but that's not true. It's very important for the president of Kenyon College to continue to make Kenyon visible, nationally, so the kind of travel I must do, and the travel I do do, for Kenyon may well switch to more talk with alumni at regional gatherings, more speeches, more editorials and articles in national publications, from what have chiefly been campaign roles, although fundraising will still be important.

Kenyon is an extraordinary place in Ohio and the world needs to know about that. At a wonderful event last spring, when the faculty surprised me after a faculty meeting with a moving reception to thank us for what we had to do for the success of the campaign, I said, "Among my plans for the future, we're going to go to more faculty lectures and symposia, more concerts and plays, and more athletic events." That's part of the reason one becomes a part of a college, in my case first as a faculty member and now as a president. There's no place on earth that's as enjoyable to learn. Where else can you read and work all day and then go to a terrific play, or a string ensemble's recital, or a basketball or volleyball game that night? So I do hope that the end of the campaign means that, both taking advantage of and demonstrating to everybody at Kenyon how important all of the activities we do are.

The Kenyon Fund 2000-01

To the Alumni

I want to thank all the donors to the 2000-01 Kenyon Fund—alumni and friends of the College alike—for their generous contributions. Once again, the fund enjoyed a record-setting year, raising $2,813,396 to bridge the gap between Kenyon's tuition and the College's operating expenses. A very strong 39 percent of alumni made contributions to the Kenyon Fund, demonstrating their allegiance to College.

While the astonishing success of the "Claiming Our Place" campaign was unfolding over the past five years, the Kenyon Fund was enjoying unprecedented growth, increasing by an astounding 74 percent. It has been my pleasure to serve on the Kenyon Fund Executive Committee throughout this period.

I look forward to my final year as chair of the Kenyon Fund, knowing that with alumni support and appreciation for the importance of the fund, we will continue to progress not just in the dollars generated for the College but also in the numbers of alumni participating in the annual fund drive.

Class of 2001 "100% Senior"

Since 1986, Kenyon seniors have pledged their support to the Kenyon Fund for their first years out of college. Last year, 52 percent of the members of the Class of 2001 made two-year pledges to the Kenyon Fund. The College is pleased to recognize these newest members of the alumni body and to thank them for their pledges of support.

Kokosing Society

In 1998-99, a new giving society was instituted to build on the strengths of the most generous donors to the Kenyon Fund and Kenyon Parents Fund since the last campaign and to achieve continued progress throughout the course of "Claiming Our Place: The Campaign for Kenyon." The new giving society, the Kokosing Society, recognizes donors who contribute an annual gift of $25,000 or more to the Kenyon Fund or Kenyon Parents Fund (including any corporate matching gifts that may apply). Donors who contribute at this level in an annual-fund year during the remaining year of the campaign (2000-01) will be considered charter members of the Kokosing Society. Kenyon is honored to recognize the 2000-01 charter members of the Kokosing Society, listed here.

Leadership Giving to the Kenyon Fund

While all gifts to the Kenyon Fund are important, gifts at the leadership level assist the fund in meeting its goals each year. In turn, proper growth in the annual funds assists the College in meeting its ever-increasing operating budget. Kenyon is pleased to recognize the following Kenyon Fund leadership donors.

Kenyon Parents Fund 2000-01

To the Kenyon Parents and Grandparents

The College and the Parents Advisory Council thank and salute the parents and grandparents who contributed so generously to the 2000-01 Kenyon Parents Fund. In spite of a slower growing economy and a much lower stock market, the fund received a record $658,380 in contributions.

Several people deserve special thanks. Linda and Jim Brandi P'01 managed a very successful Senior Parent Challenge. Thanks to them and all Senior Parent Challenge donors. Thanks are also due to the Parents Advisory Council members who wrote letters and made telephone calls to other parents and followed up to get Kenyon's message to our parent body. Finally, special thanks go to the Office of Alumni and Parent Relations and Annual Funds for the staff's kindness, diligence, organization, and creativity. Kenyon is lucky to have them.

On a personal note, as the proud father of a son who will graduate this spring, I am fortunate to have had the opportunity to serve, in some small way, this wonderful institution which has been so good to him. Working with the administration, the Parents Advisory Council, and many Kenyon parents has made me feel more in touch with my son and his college life. Thank you all for this.

Corporate Matching Gifts

In 2000-01, Kenyon received 427 matching gifts for a total of $271,766. There are more than a thousand companies that will match employees's charitable contributions; many will also match for directors, retired employees, and spouses of employees. Alumni, parents, and friends of the College are encouraged to ask about matching-gift programs at their personnel or employee benefits offices. Listed below are the companies that provided matching gifts to Kenyon between July 1, 2000, and June 30, 2001.

IMO: In memory of IHO: In honor of Alumni admissions volunteers are crucial to the work of Kenyon's admissions office, and alumni are unendingly generous with their efforts. To ensure the College's presence in high schools across the United States and abroad, alumni participated in more than one hundred college fairs during the 2000-01 academic year. More than four hundred and fifty alumni contacted prospective students, working with them as they submitted applications and after acceptances were received. Alumni also conducted numerous interviews with prospective students who were unable to visit the campus.

As each class takes its place on the Hill, Kenyon is affirmed and renewed; countless hours of devotion from members of the College community make this possible. The admissions office extends special thanks to all who help with the delicate process of marrying a student and an intellectual community.

Awards

Outstanding Kenyon students and faculty members, along with two distinguished graduates, were recognized at the College's annual Honors Day Convocation on April 5, 2001.

Honorary degrees were awarded to businessman David F. Banks '65, for his support of the arts and his leadership of the Kenyon Review; R.D. "Dick" Harrison '53, for his contributions as chief executive of the Baldwin Piano and Organ Company, as a philanthropist, and as a College trustee; and Charles N. Huggins '49, president of See's Candies, for his business accomplishments and his generosity to Kenyon and other causes.

In addition, two faculty members were awarded $15,000 each as recipients of the 2001 Trustee Teaching Excellence Awards. Recognized for their superior work were Professor of History Reed S. Browning and Associate Professor of English Sergei Lobanov-Rostovsky.

Unless otherwise noted, those students listed as award and prize winners are members of the Class of 2001.

On Honors Day 2001, honorary degrees were presented to three distinguished alumni: Charles Huggins '49 (top), Dick Harrison '53 (middle), and David Banks '65 (bottom).

The Honors Day Addresses

When I look at the impressive list of past honorary degree candidates, when I think about the extraordinary achievements of my fellow recipients today, and when I compare my less-than-stellar undergraduate record with those of students receiving awards today, my thoughts begin to focus on a single question: What am I doing here?

That wasn't a question I asked myself when I was a student at Kenyon, because despite many humbling experiences, I always felt I belonged here. But that doesn't mean it was easy. I came here in 1949 with the naive confidence that only the young possess. I thought, for instance, that Freshman English would be a piece of cake, but Professor Timberlake served me a C instead.

During a beginning French course, Professor Ashford, known to all of us as "Fauncy," said to me in frustration, "Mr. Harrison, why don't you take out a piece of paper one-half inch square and write on it everything you know."

A good college teaches many things, but one of them is that we don't know everything; once we learn that, then we can learn other things. And sometimes we don't know what we have learned until later. It was only after a number of years that I began to appreciate, and become increasingly grateful to, Professor Paul Titus and the Kenyon economics department. I was lucky enough to combine this with a passion for a job that kept me with the same company for my entire career of forty-two years.

During my years since graduation, Kenyon has become something of a family affair. Actually, that started before I graduated when Anne Woods, my wife to be, spent almost as much time at Kenyon as she did at Denison during her freshman year there.

Two of our children, Jeremy and Ellen, graduated from Kenyon, in 1982 and 1985, respectively. Our two older sons, Andy and Jeff, grew fond of Kenyon as a result of our many visits to Gambier, and son Jeff gave a poetry reading here two years ago. His third book of poetry will be published this fall.

I was also grateful to be able to return to Kenyon many times as a member of the Board of Trustees. I have nothing but the greatest respect and affection for the Kenyon administrative and faculty people with whom I worked.

As a result of all these things, I have many fond memories of Kenyon, both from my years as a student and afterwards. Thank you, Kenyon, for everything, and for this great honor today!

—Dick Harrison '53

I'd never been to Gambier until I arrived for my freshman year. My enrollment started a love affair that remains just as intense today. That affection is why I am so pleased with the great things President Oden has accomplished at Kenyon and with his elegant vision for Kenyon's future. He's improved a place I care for. That affection is also why I am so pleased and, indeed, flattered to be here today.

Turning up in Gambier in 1961 was more tribulation for my classmates than for me. Being a proper redneck, I didn't talk like them. Still don't. Nor had I ever seen snow or thrown a snowball. Most grew tired of my southern witticisms. However, absolutely everyone got sick and tired of being continually pelted by my snowballs. I loved throwing snowballs. I loved the place. It looked like a college should look. It had a sense of majesty to it. Instructors were magical. I was dazzled by their intellectual skills, impressed with their deep knowledge and their rich vocabulary. Their classes opened doors that have never closed for me. Sadly, my grades probably reflected more an enchantment with the social life than faculty excellence. But the impact was profound and enduring.

The Jesuits say, "Give me your child for the first six years, I will have him for the rest of his life." My first six years of life were formative for me, as were my cherished high-school years, with football glory and the inevitable agonies of the teenage years. But college was a far more formative experience for me. It was a time when you could try on all sorts of ideas and personality traits, like so many theater costumes. Styles and values and roles got tested. And you enjoyed the no-fault protection of being able to discard the things that didn't fit. You could wear what you fancied from then on, through your life. It was a time of infinite opportunity. All you had to do was take the responsibility for selection. Kenyon was the perfect setting: distant, intense, and intellectually challenging, a nourishing cocoon with a faculty that would go more than halfway to help you make the right choices.

I valued my time at Kenyon. My development served me very well. There are far more successful graduates. However, I have had the opportunity to run companies big and small in England, Hong Kong, Canada, and the United States, all a very long way from Muskogee, Georgia. I attribute the successes I've enjoyed to the abilities formed here. The failings, well, they were inherent; I didn't pick them up in Gambier.

So, I carry a great debt to Kenyon. Work that I've been privileged to do with the Kenyon Review has afforded me the chance to pay a little bit of that back.

During the time I have been fortunate enough to sit on Kenyon's Board of Trustees, I was given the opportunity to work with a very talented and inspired group that set out to save the Review. It had fallen on hard times. It was not as valued by the faculty or the students at Kenyon as it had been.

John Crowe Ransom started the Kenyon Review in 1939. It quickly became America's most influential platform for literary criticism. Its fame spread far beyond America's shores. Such was the world's interest in American literature. Such was the quality of the Review. In many respects, its reputation was bigger than the College's.

However, by 1991 times had gotten hard. Competition made it tougher to distinguish the Review. It was losing $250,000 a year, and the general view on campus was that it was not contributing enough to life on the Hill to justify robbing someone's precious budget to save it. The Review was estranged, mostly centered in New York City, and there were too many other demands on the College's financial resources. So, it was believed the Kenyon Review should be terminated. I was asked to be one of the executioners, along with Dick Harrison. However, the kernel of a different idea began to grow.

Together with Paul Healy '85 and Tory Douglass '92, and with a great deal of excellent advice and wisdom from Fred Kluge '64 along with some practical guidance from Vice President for Finance Joe Nelson, we prepared a classical business case analysis of the Review. We recommended it be retained, albeit with a fundamental overhaul. Consideration of our report became controversial, a struggle. It was the most emotional issue encountered in my sixteen years on the Board of Trustees. The result was closely contested, right down to the wire. Ultimately, however, the Board of Trustees gave its backing and blessing to implement our recommendations.

Along the way to recovery, we were blessed with much good fortune, none more providential than then-president Phil Jordan naming David Lynn '76 as editor and getting the full support of the English department. We formed a charitable corporation, separate from the College. We recruited a board—an excellent and devoted group of people—to oversee the Review's performance without intruding into its editorial license, and we raised an endowment with the objective of assuring the future of the Review by making it financially self-sufficient. All of that has been great and gratifying. However, best of all are the wonderful achievements of the Review itself. It has been brought back to the Hill, and it is deeply involved in the fabric of Kenyon's community. The scope of the Review has been diversified with successful programs like the summer program Young Writers at Kenyon. The operating costs have been successfully wrestled under control. The circulation has been increased. At the same time, by wide consensus, the quality of the Review's scholarship has been improved. We get excellent feedback from the literary world.

At the end of the day, the Kenyon Review is the College's crown jewel. If it doesn't sparkle, Kenyon is diminished. If it vanished, the College would be seriously lessened. Any good marketing executive will tell you that, in the highly competitive college world, to succeed Kenyon College must differentiate itself. The Review differentiates Kenyon College. That's the point. If Kenyon didn't have the Review, it'd have to invent it. But the College has got the Review, and it is shining very brightly, indeed. Apart from the critical acclaim, the Review was recently selected by the Nobel Institute to showcase their Nobel laureates. That designation is the accolade that very clearly says, "The Kenyon Review is back where it ought to be." It's a true Kenyon success story.

Today, I am being honored because of my work on the Kenyon Review. However, there are a lot of people that deserve this honor more than I, including Paul Healy, David Lynn, Rob Oden, Fred Kluge, Vice President for Development Kimberlee Klesner, Joe Nelson, the board of the Review, and my wife, Torunn, who put up with all the sturm und drang and all my time away from home. I am very flattered to represent them.

Thank you.

—David Banks '65

It was a typical cold winter day fifty-five years ago, in February 1946, when I arrived in the tiny college town of Gambier, Ohio. I had traveled from my then family home in Dayton to begin my studies at Kenyon, and I was eager to get settled in. I was to become a member of the Class of 1949, and I was just about to celebrate my twenty-first birthday.

World War II had ended barely eight months before, and my discharge from the U.S. Army Paratroops had taken place just six weeks before my arrival in Gambier. I had entered the service just after finishing high school, and, therefore, I had no previous chance to enter college.

As a matter of fact, almost one year before, my 513th Parachute Infantry Regiment was in battle in two feet of freezing snow in Belgium. Our mission was to kill German soldiers, or be killed ourselves. I was literally fighting for my life against both the German Army and the weather. Ohio winter weather always reminded me of that.

That factor provided an interesting common denominator with my classmates, who were a rare combination of veterans returning from service with every branch of our Armed Forces. Some had grim combat experiences of one kind or another; others had spent their military careers within the United States. There was also a mixture of men with previous years at Kenyon before wartime service calls interrupted their studies and took them away. By the end of the war, in 1945, some 984 Kenyon men had served in our Armed Forces. Since Kenyon up to then had an all-male student body, those numbers were most impressive for a small college.

I was soon to learn that the College and the town existed in an extremely placid and pleasant place, even in the chill of winter, and they served as a most appropriate environment within which all of us could start, or restart, a new phase of our lives. Our class was less than 150 men in size, and that factor lent itself to knowing every class member and all of the faculty members by name. Some of us became married, as I did in 1947. Some members accelerated their studies by attending summer school and completing advanced studies, as I did. That helped those of us who were eager to graduate and move into a career in the real world as soon as possible. And so we studied, and we learned, and we played, and we matured.

And so, by some fortuitous combination of absolute luck and divine ordination, I found myself on the threshold of a learning experience opportunity at Kenyon which, when combined with the other experiences of my life to that time, provided me with the foundation of confidence, motivation, and discipline that would serve me faithfully throughout the years ahead as I figured out what I wanted to be.

In March of 1949, even before Commencement Day, I completed all of my study and classroom test requirements, and my late wife, Mime, and I packed up all of our possessions from the Married Students Barracks into our Ford V-8 coupe and headed for San Francisco.

My first job in San Francisco was as a business machine salesman—one that didn't suit me at all. Then in April of 1951, through the Graduate Placement Office of Stanford University, and a friend who was Stanford's dean of men, I was presented with an opportunity to interview for a management-training position with a small California-based candy company called See's. It was named after the family who founded the company in 1921 and the family matriarch, Mary See.

Fifty years ago, in April of 1951, I started a managerial career with See's Candies, which is still far from being over. For twenty-one years, I worked for and with the See Family, and then, in January of 1972, they decided to sell the company to Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway Company.

Warren invited me to become See's first non-family chief executive officer and president. That stroke of luck and good fortune then opened up another opportunity for me to fall back on all of the different sources of knowledge and learning that had entered my life to that time. And, in the twenty-nine years since, I completely acknowledge all of the experiences of my life that have served as guideposts to how I think and act.

I must recognize the importance of my war experience discipline, and the whole broad scope of knowledge and learning that Kenyon provided me, both of which have remained forever as the foundations for how I think and conduct myself as a business manager, a husband, father and grandfather, and contributing citizen of the communities in which my family members and I live.

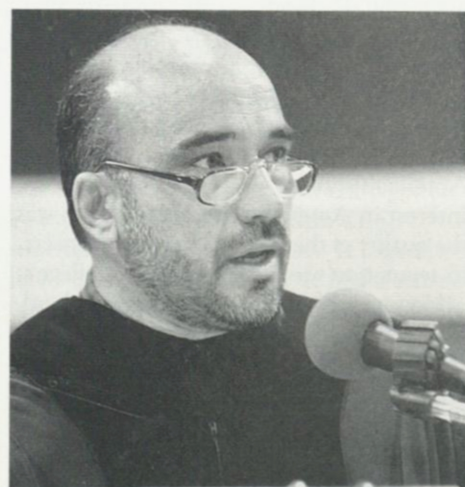

As young students of Kenyon, and all it has to offer, I ask you to take full measure of the depth of learning opportunity you have here during your relatively short stay. Don't miss any of the many possibilities you will have to make a difference in how you conduct your lives after you leave the shelter of this place and its wonders. Look around you and find someone you admire and respect in the world as a role model and fashion your thoughts and actions in your lives ahead by their example. I have had several heroes during my seventy-six-year lifetime, and their contributions to the world have given me reason to admire them. They are Winston Churchill, Dwight Eisenhower, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Louis Armstrong, and Warren Buffett.

It is with great pride that I have been chosen to join with all of you to be honored today as a son of Kenyon. May the years ahead bring, for each of you, all of the opportunities in life with which I have so fortunately been endowed.

Marilyn Yarbrough P'95 gave the Commencement address for the Class of 2001, and Associate Professor of Philosophy Juan De Pascuale delivered the Baccalaureate address.

Retiring Professor of Philosophy Ronald McLaren '58 is congratulated by President Oden.

Commencement 2001

Marilyn V. Yarbrough, a law professor well known for her work on race and gender discrimination as well as legal education and sports law, presented the Commencement address at Kenyon's one hundred seventy-third Commencement ceremony on Saturday, May 19.

The Commencement program began at 10:30 a.m. on the lawn of Samuel Mather Hall. In addition to presenting diplomas to graduating seniors, Kenyon conferred honorary doctorates on human-rights activist Unity Dow, on journalist Ellen Hume, and on former diplomat John Shattuck, who was recently named the chief executive officer of the John F. Kennedy Presidential Library and Foundation. Yarbrough also received an honorary doctorate, as did retiring faculty member Ronald E. McLaren '58, professor of philosophy.

On Friday, May 18, Juan E. De Pascuale, associate professor of philosophy, addressed the Baccalaureate service at 1:30 p.m. on the Samuel Mather lawn. A member of the faculty since 1984, De Pascuale received the College's Trustee Award for Distinguished Teaching in 1994 and its Martin Luther King Jr. Humanitarian Award in 2000. In 1995, he won the American Philosophical Association Award for Excellence in Teaching Philosophy. De Pascuale's main scholarly interests are in nineteenth- and twentieth-century philosophy, philosophy of art, and philosophy of religion.

Yarbrough, who teaches law at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, received her undergraduate degree at Virginia State University and worked as a systems engineer for IBM and the Westinghouse Aerospace and Defense Center before pursuing her legal studies. She received her law degree from the University of California at Los Angeles in 1973 and began her teaching career two years later at the Boston College Law School.

Yarbrough went on to law faculty posts and administrative positions at the universities of Kansas, West Virginia, Tennessee, and South Carolina, as well as at Duke University. At North Carolina, she has served as associate provost in addition to teaching.

As an authority on discrimination as well as sports law, Yarbrough has written about the "invisibility" of black women athletes and about gender-equity issues in collegiate sports. Other topics of her scholarly articles include employment discrimination, school reform, child custody, and women and the law.

In 1997, Yarbrough served on an advisory committee on gender-integrated training for the United States Department of Defense. She also served for a number of years on the Pulitzer Prize board, the group that chooses recipients of the prestigious writing award, and on the infractions committee of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

In addition, she has been active in legal-education circles. She worked extensively with the Law School Admission Council, becoming a member of its board of trustees in 1980 and serving as president from 1986 to 1988. She has also been involved in the American Bar Association Section of Legal Education and Admission to the Bar. Currently she is a member of the public review board of the United Auto Workers union.

Yarbrough has served on Kenyon's board since 1993. She is a member of the board's committees on curriculum and faculty as well as information technology. She is also a Kenyon parent: her daughter, Carla R. Ainsworth, graduated in 1995.

Unity Dow left her native Botswana to study law at the University of Edinburgh, then returned to pursue a career combining legal affairs and activism. She helped form groups that have pressed for women's and children's rights and for reforms in laws affecting marriage and domestic abuse. In 1992, she won a landmark case that overturned Botswana's Citizenship Act, which restricted women's ability to transmit nationality to their children. In 1998, she was named the first female judge on the High Court of Botswana.

Ellen Hume, whose reporting experience includes posts as a White House correspondent for the Wall Street Journal and a national reporter for the Los Angeles Times, has earned recognition as a media analyst, television commentator, teacher, speaker, and innovator in programs devoted to the understanding of democracy. From 1988 to 1993, she was executive director of the Shorenstein Center on the Press, Politics, and Public Policy at Harvard. In 1996, she founded public television's Democracy Project. Author of Tabloids, Talk Radio and the Future of News, she has conducted journalism and democracy workshops throughout the nation as well as in Bosnia, the Czech Republic, Poland, and Russia.

Before assuming his current position at the John F. Kennedy Presidential Library and Foundation, John Shattuck pursued a distinguished career as a diplomat, teacher and scholar, and civil-liberties attorney. As national counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union, he tried cases involving privacy rights and political surveillance. He served as assistant secretary of state for democracy, human rights, and labor in the Clinton administration, a post that involved him deeply in human-rights issues in nations from Bosnia to Indonesia. In 1998, President Clinton named him ambassador to the Czech Republic, where he served until early this year.

After graduating from Kenyon, McLaren earned his doctorate from Yale University and returned to Gambier in 1965 as a member of the philosophy department. He was promoted from assistant to associate professor in 1968, then to full professor in 1989. While teaching a wide variety of courses, McLaren has pursued scholarly interests in ethics, moral education, and the philosophy of language. The father of Eileen McLaren Shivak '83 and Kathleen L. McLaren '83, he is the author of Solving Moral Problems: A Strategy for Practical Inquiry.

Reunion 2001

Reunion Weekend 2001 will be remembered as the occasion for a gala celebration marking the success of Kenyon's "Claiming Our Place" campaign. At that landmark event on Friday, May 25, President Robert A. Oden Jr. was able to announce to the 700 invited guests (all contributors) that the campaign had exceeded its $100-million goal by more than $12 million. (The eventual total, on June 30, 2001, was $116,458,241.)

From Thursday, May 24, through Sunday, May 27, the College welcomed back to campus members of classes ending in 1s and 6s, alumni of the Chasers (an a cappella singing group), and inductees into the Kenyon Athletic Association Hall of Fame.

On Friday, Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds Tom Lepley led off the Alumni College with a tour of Kenyon's new natural-sciences facilities. The second session, with Associate Professor of English and Editor of the Kenyon Review David H. Lynn '76, was entitled "How a Story Works: Reading Like a Writer." The third and final offering, "George W. Bush: The First 100 Days," was presented by Assistant Professor of Political Science Pamela Camerra-Rowe.

Saturday morning activities began with the annual 5k fun run through the village and the historical tour of the campus.

President Robert A. Oden Jr. and other senior staff administrators held a "town meeting" later in the morning, with a brief address by the president followed by a question-and-answer period.

At 11:45 a.m., the Parade of Classes stepped off smartly behind bagpiper Samuel P. Todd Jr. '47 P'76,'81, who led the assembled multitudes into the Celebration '00 Awards Luncheon and Alumni Association Annual Meeting. Newly elected alumni trustees and Alumni Council members were recognized at the event, along with alumni who have distinguished themselves through outstanding service to the College.

On Saturday afternoon, the KAA hosted a reception in the lobby of Bolton Theater, followed by the Hall of Fame induction ceremony in the theater. Also during the afternoon, in the spirit of the College's literary tradition, a reception was held in the Greenslade Special Collections Room of Olin Library celebrating alumni authors in the reunion classes.

Saturday evening activities began at the Hospitality Tent on Ransom Green with a reception for all reunion classes except the twenty-fifth and fiftieth, which were entertained at Cromwell House by the Odens. Class dinners followed, after which the Chasers alumni presented their reunion concert in Rosse Hall. Again this year, the all-reunion dance featured the popular Rick Brunetto Big Band. Many members of the Kenyon community joined the festivities in Upper Dempsey Hall, which concluded—officially, at least—at 1:00 a.m.

On Sunday morning, the Alumni Memorial Service was celebrated in the Church of the Holy Spirit.

Alumni Awards Conferred at Annual Luncheon

At the Alumni Awards Luncheon during Reunion Weekend, several awards were presented for outstanding achievement in the Kenyon Fund during 2000-01.

Note: The first four trophies are awarded on the basis of class donations (gift and pledges) received as of 12:00 noon on the Friday of Reunion Weekend, not on the June 30 end-of-year results.

The Class of '21 Plate, given to the class with the greatest percentage of its members donating to the Kenyon Fund, excluding the 50th Reunion and earlier classes. The Class of 1961 won for its participation rate of 54 percent for its 40th Reunion.

The William H. Thomas Jr. Award, given to the major reunion class with the greatest dollar amount of donations to the Kenyon Fund. The Class of 1951 won for its Kenyon Fund gift of $104,272.

The Class of '62 Award, given to the reunion class with the greatest percentage of its members donating to the Kenyon Fund. The Class of 1951, with 59 percent of its members participating, won the award.

The Class of '63 Cup, awarded in acknowledgment of the class whose contributions to the Kenyon Fund, in total dollars, represent the greatest percentage increase over their giving for the previous year. The Class of '63 Cup recognizes dedication to the reunion-giving program and perseverance in working toward an ambitious reunion giving goal. In 2000-01, the Class of 1996 increased its giving by 420 percent.

The Peirce Cup is awarded annually to the class with the greatest percentage of its members in attendance at Reunion Weekend. The Class of 1951 won the award, with 43 percent of its members present.

Inductions into the Kenyon Athletic Association Hall of Fame

On May 26, the Kenyon Athletic Association (KAA) inducted five alumni into its Hall of Fame. Those recognized were Ronald R. Ryan '53, James H. Peace '71, Christopher E. Shedd '83, L. Jill Tibbe '88, and Jon P. Howell '90.

The Burchell H. Rowe Award, presented by Dennis Mulvihill '88, was given to Arthur J. Henahan III '86. The Rowe Award is presented to a member of the College community who has been especially supportive of the athletic program.

Ryan, one of the best tennis players in Kenyon history, enters the Hall of Fame as the second individual to represent the Lord's tennis team. Throughout his collegiate career, he lost just three matches. Peace served as a starting lacrosse goalie for the Lords, logging 780 career saves, a thirty-year-old record that is still unbroken. Shedd, considered one of the College's most versatile swimmers, swam as a member of the first four Kenyon National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Division III championship swim teams. He became the first Division III swimmer in NCAA history to break the 1:40:00 mark in the 200-yard freestyle. Tibbe, a basketball standout, graduated as the College's all-time leading scorer with 1,436 points. Now ranked second behind the 1,794-point total of Kim Graf '97, Tibbe still holds Kenyon's single-game record of 38 points. Howell, another member of four national championship swim teams, was a twenty-one-time All-American and an eleven-time NCAA individual champion.
