Kenyon Returns to First Tier in National Survey

By Bertram Tunnell
Co-Editor in Chief

U.S. News and World Report announced that Kenyon has re-entered the first tier of the best national liberal arts colleges in the nation (Sept. 26 issue). Kenyon dropped out of the first tier (then referred to as quartile) in 1991 to the second quartile where it remained until now.

The data for which the schools are assessed are divided into six attributes: reputation, selectivity, faculty resources, financial resources, graduation rate and alumni satisfaction. The report rated Kenyon with an overall academic reputation of 27 out of 160 other liberal arts schools.

According to the report, Kenyon's average midpoint SAT/ACT score was 1170. Forty-four percent of the first-year class was in the top 10 percent of their high school class. Kenyon's acceptance rate was 70 percent last year.

Financial resources count for 10 percent of a school's academic rating. Kenyon spends approximately $14,067 per student. The average percentage of first-year students enrolled in 1984 to 1987 who graduated within six years is 85 percent. Our alumni giving rate is 46 percent. Ninety-five percent of the faculty have earned their Ph.Ds.

President Jordan responded, "I'm pleased to see Kenyon more properly recognized in the 1994 U.S. NEWS hierarchy. While the ranking enterprise is seriously flawed, we should be proud to find Kenyon rated among the best in academic reputation and in overall appraisal."

"The admiration of the wider world of higher education is catching up to the realities of Kenyon's quality," concluded Jordan.

Dean of Admissions John Anderson commented on the new rating, "I'm delighted we were moved back into the top tier. We rank twenty-seventh in academic reputation, so we are truly among the leaders in that area. That ties us with two of the top 25 schools, and ahead of one of them. Our strongest dimension is in academic reputation. We should have been in the first tier all along."

"I still don't believe," continued Anderson, "in the notion of ranking colleges in the way they do it. I have yet to see any confirmation in the methods they use to compile the list hire any validity."

On page 89 of U.S. News Anderson pointed out the statement, "Reputation matters and that, perhaps, is why the acting president of Ohio Wesleyan University this year sent letters to heads of other institutions in its category lobbying for his school in the U.S. News survey."

Anderson concludes "Kenyon is where it is now without any lobbying...we earned our place."

Update on Alpha Delt Lawsuit Against College

According to Beth Dudley Stauffer, director of student activities, organizations, and greek affairs, on September 20, the number of members in the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity dropped from 19 to 17.

Greek Council President, Gerard Solis said that Greek Council will officially take a stance of neutrality over the Alpha Delt's lawsuit against the school.

Grant to Support Arts

The George Gund Foundation of Cleveland, Ohio, has awarded Kenyon a grant of $100,000 to support photography instruction.

The funds were given to provide studio and classroom space in the College's new Mayer Art Center.

"This generous assistance will make possible a significant enhancement of instruction in photography at Kenyon," said President Jordan. "We are most grateful."

The Mayer Art Center, which opened during the last academic year, was designed in part by three members of the studio art faculty, including Professor Gregory Spaid. Among new darkroom features is a silver-recovery system to provide an ecologically responsible way to cleanse waste chemicals before disposing of them.

Hacker Remarks on her Sudden Dismissal from Kenyon Review

By Elizabeth Bennett
News Editor

This month's issue of The Advocate, a national gay and lesbian newsmagazine, features an interview with former Kenyon Review Editor Marilyn Hacker. Though the article discusses her life and work, Hacker candidly claims that she was fired from the Review last June.

John Weir '80 conducted the interview, which states that Hacker served for four years as the editor of the Review, until "she was fired summarily last June."

According to Weir's article, Hacker "rescued the Review from long-standing dullness, transforming it into a forum for exciting new writing, including work from emerging gay and lesbian authors." Hacker mentions that she made a great effort to include gay and lesbian authors as well as authors of color in the Review.

Hacker speculates that her editorial policy may have cost her the job. "Somebody on the college's trustees committee asked questions when they were 'investigating' the magazine, like 'Isn't it true that the content of the Kenyon Review has become much more narrow?' Narrow meaning it's not stuff written 85 percent by straight white men," said Hacker.

Hacker is the author of seven volumes of poetry, including Winter Numbers (which will be published this fall).

In the current issue of the Kenyon Review, David Lynn, associate professor of English and editor of the Review addresses many of the issues Hacker suggests in her interview with the Advocate.

In the Review's "To Our Readers" section, Lynn commends Hacker's work for the Review saying, "Marilyn Hacker is, as well as being one of the leading poets of our time, a brilliant literary editor. Her tenure at the Review may well be regarded as one of the highlights of the magazine's illustrious history."

Lynn, however, maintains that there is no evidence that the Board of Trustees didn't renew Hacker's contract because of her editorial policy. Rather, her contract was not renewed due to financial strains on the College.

Hacker was the first full-time editor in the Review's history.

According to Lynn, if the College refused to renew Hacker's contract because of her editorial policy then they wouldn't allow the Review to publish over a year of her selected material and work.

Now, angry about the recent attacks against the Review, Lynn suggested some of the ways the Review is trying to become a more integral part of the school. Through lowering subscription costs for Kenyon students, hiring students as associate workers, and a number of other programs Lynn wants to bring the Review, "back to the hill."

Brothers United, Potential Campus Fraternity, Aspires for Solidarity

By Mathew Jadud
Staff Reporter

September 14 heralded the first Brothers United open house on Kenyon's campus. This event marked the beginning of their time here on campus as an organization of men with specific goals.

The concept for this fraternity developed last year, when ten black men came together for support and direction. After realizing the importance of what they found, they began official overtures with the administration to begin a new fraternity that would allow them to share this support with others.

Michael Williams, multicultural program coordinator, worked with these students as they clarified the beliefs and goals that they wished their fraternity to embody. These goals and beliefs include: strengthening the relationship between black males and the Kenyon campus, enriching the community with socially diverse programs to help educate the campus and community, providing a social, emotional, and spiritual outlet open to brothers of every race and color, and to provide a place for them to call home.

With support from the administration Brothers United will undergo a one-year probationary period, during which they will operate as a fraternity on campus. After this year, the decision as to their status of remaining a local fraternity or an national fraternity will be reached.

The activities they have planned for this year focus on community and education in both Gambier and Mount Vernon. Providing workshops, hosting speakers and social activities, working as part of a Big Brothers/Big Sisters program, and playing a role in the Tribute to Women of Color as part of the year's celebration of 25 years of women. Kenyon are on their current agenda.

There were a number of questions raised by the audience at the open house as to the future of the Brothers United. Dues have been ruled out for the most part, a minimum GPA of 2.3 is required, and a genuine interest in the tenets of the group is essential for membership.

If their status becomes permanent on campus, their plans include a seat on the Council and potential membership in national fraternities, such as Kappa Alpha Psi, through which scholarships and other funding would be possible.

As to housing for the group, one member of the fraternity made it very clear that "housing is definitely at the bottom of a list of things we wish to accomplish."

"BU is at Kenyon College now and forever," was the sentiment expressed by the group's vice president, junior Marlon Hood. They intend to give as much to the community as they can while finding strength in each other.

"This fraternity provided a focus - strong emotional center for me," said sophomore Robert King, member of Brothers United, "and that's the main thing that brought us together."

"Persistence and patience are what it will take," said one member, "and armed with that, what cannot be done?"

Class of '98 Shows Academic Promise

By Kristin Filipic
Staff Reporter

This August, Kenyon College saw an unusually large number of new students. According to the admissions department, the class of 1998 is one of the academically strongest and most ethnically and geographically diverse classes that has entered Kenyon in the past ten years.

465 new students entered Gambier this fall. 434 first-year students enrolled, which is 14 more than the goal set by the admissions department. There are also 23 transfer students enrolled and eight visiting students.

According to admissions officer Bev Morse, although applications last year were down by 15 percent, the class of 1998 is one of the academically strongest classes that Kenyon has seen in the past decade. Forty-two percent of the first-year class is from the top decile of their high school classes. Many high schools do not provide class rank, so the number of academically superior students could be much higher.

Average standardized test scores are also higher than previous years. The average SAT verbal score was 576 and the average

SAT math score was 601.

The class of 1998 also boasts greater ethnic and geographic diversity than previous classes. Between 12 and 13 percent of the students are multicultural. Enrolling minority students include 19 Asians, 22 African-American students, 8 Latinos, and 3 students of other non-Western backgrounds. Forty-five states and the District of Columbia have sent incoming students to Kenyon this year. Certain states that do not traditionally send many students to Kenyon are well represented this year. California is the third most represented state, and Colorado is in the top 11, which is extremely unusual, according to Morse.

Morse emphasized that the strength of this class is due to the work of the entire college in encouraging high school students to consider Kenyon. Many students, alumnae, and faculty volunteered to call prospective students and work during visit days.

Morse commented that recruiting students is an institutional effort, and "the whole institution should get credit for it." According to first-year student Aaron Thurow, "We have our problems, but we also have a lot of potential."

New ARA Staff Members Execute Changes to Feed Hungry Masses

By David Frank
Managing Editor

"Everybody asked for it last year." That is the reason ARA is serving hot dogs at lunch and pasta and hamburgers at dinner according to Ross Garrison, Food Service Director. In order to serve those items everyday, ARA has been using new charcoal broilers.

Gund's closure on the weekends is "working out" in the opinion of Garrison. He has opened the Shoppes eating area on Saturday to handle the overflow. With the "All-Stu" e-mails that Garrison has been sending, he has been finding out ways to improve the new arrangement in the Peirce servery.

A new ice machine has been ordered for the left side, so people do not have to go to soda machines in order to get ice for their water or juice. The salad bar now has four points of service and will soon have dispensers for bowls on both sides.

The rumors about the Very Fine Juice machine disappearing are not true. "In fact we will have bottles of Very Fine Juice for sale in the Shoppes at night," said Garrison. However, there have been some problems with the supplier. The normal supplier had no idea about how popular it would be with the students.

The expensive products are the mixed juices. They cost just as much as the Minute Maid plain juices. What would be cheaper is the flavored teas and Garrison is going to order those more often so ARA can afford to keep the machine.

There are also two new managers on the food service staff. Jeff Shrader is the new Shoppes and Gund manager.

Phil Gajda is the new Peirce Hall manager for food service. Garrison explains that Gajda is "responsible for the nuts and bolts."

Gajda graduated from the Cooking Institute of America in New York. Garrison is hoping that Gajda will be able to improve the quality on a consistent basis and make it more appealing.

ARA is trying to cook the food to order. This means bring the cooking appliances to the front part of the kitchen so the students can see the food being put in the rectangular pan. This does not save on expenses. Compared to last year, no money has been taken out of the food budget.

Garrison is encouraging students to let him know if they have any reasonable complaints. He has an open door policy, students may e-mail him and let him know what they think about the food service.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Student Comments on Ethics of "Take Action!" Pamphlet

To the Kenyon Community:

On September 13, 1994 a flyer entitled, "TAKE ACTION!" was circulated throughout the Kenyon Community. This flyer contained the name of a Kenyon Alum as well as his home phone number. Furthermore, the flyer urged anyone who read it to "take action" by calling this Kenyon Alum and wasting his valuable time and resources. It is my contention that this flyer is a violation of this Alum's Constitutional right to privacy as well as a violation of the harassment policies at Kenyon College.

Harassment, as defined in Kenyon College Student Handbook is:

...offensive to the principles of appropriate discourse and civil conduct. Indeed, it is a form of persecution which can cause extreme anguish and humiliation. (94)

Based upon the contents of this flyer, in its urging the Kenyon Community to waste this Alum's time and resources, one can only conclude that its intent was to anger and humiliate this Kenyon Alum.

Kenyon also states in its Student Handbook:

By accepting membership in [the Kenyon] community, students and employees assume a responsibility for a commitment to free expression, free inquiry, honesty, tolerance, and respect for the rights and dignity of others. (94)

Although the person who issued this flyer is entitled to free expression, in furnishing this Kenyon Alum's home phone number and urging the Kenyon Community to squander this Alum's time, that person does not in any way whatsoever respect this Alum's right to privacy. In addition, the flyer also violates the dignity of this Kenyon Alum by implying that wasting this Alum's time and resources is acceptable.

Finally, it is also my contention that the person responsible for issuing this flyer has taken advantage of an alumni system that has been proven to work. Any student of alum can go into the Alumni Office and get a book which contains the names, addresses and phone numbers of Kenyon Alumni. This can be done for whatever well-intentioned purpose there may be (i.e. to talk to Alums about jobs). But what this person has done is taken this system and manipulated it for his own purposes in issuing this flyer. In effect, he has violated the trust and faith of Kenyon Alumni and the Kenyon Community in an alumni system that should work. Thus, I feel that in the interest of all Kenyon Alumni, as well as myself being an up-and-coming Alum, that this situation be dealt with in such a way that it rids the College of such harassment and restores the Kenyon Alumni's faith in the College and the Alumni system.

This letter is not in anyway representative of any organization that I may be a member of or associated with.

Concerned student and future Alum,
James Dewar '95

Voices from the Tower

By Courtney Coughlin

After attending Professor Derrick Bell's lecture I wondered how much Kenyon students perceive themselves as consumers in the educational marketplace. Bell claimed that students consider themselves slaves rather than customers, and therefore they take on a slave-like mentality. This mindframe becomes responsible for the sense of apathy and laziness apparent on many campuses, and certainly ours is no exception. Many of us do the minimum of what is expected to receive a decent grade and we still complain about the workload rather than consider the opportunity costs.

The cost of education is certainly great in terms of time and money. How conscious are we of our investment? Do we take advantage of the many things that Kenyon advertises to prospective students? Most likely we take advantage of some of these things—they are the reasons we came here and the reasons we stay. But I think that we need to question what we are really gaining for our dollars.

Certainly today it is not the guarantee of a job after graduation nor is it the vision that our formal education will be complete. It is not the dream that we will be truly prepared to conquer the problems of the world off the hill, but perhaps it is the confidence that we can survive uncertainty.

I was concerned and saddened that there had to be a further call for candidates to run for student government. Today we are in great need of progressive, capable leaders. We often complain about the political leaders that we do have, yet if other campuses are similar to Kenyon there are few leaders in the making—at least that is how it appears on the surface.

There are leaders here at Kenyon. People are involved and do challenge themselves to make the most of their college career inside the classroom and in the community. But what performance do we expect from our College? How can we test their product, which in essence our personal goals?

What you expect from people is what you receive, so I encourage fellow students to expect a lot from your professors and administrators. In the same vein, professors should expect a lot from their students or else they are not providing a complete package. The most satisfying classes I have attended are those that force me to extend my knowledge and abilities in ways that I did not know I was capable.

Challenge yourself in classes because you are paying too much to feel unsatisfied at the end of the semester. Use people as resources and ask questions. Bell says, "It is not success or failure, but the work itself." Be a responsible consumer. Make sure the product you are purchasing and using provides you with more than a degree after four years, but a feeling of accomplishment through personal growth, knowledge, and experience.

New Security Policy Induces Tension at Campus Parties

By Jessica McLaren
Senior Staff Reporter

"When you come to Kenyon, you will be treated as a responsible adult. What you do in terms of alcohol and the law will be your decision. We are not here to be your parents."

This was the answer given two years ago by a Kenyon admissions representative when asked about the alcohol policy by a student at the Nichols School in Buffalo, New York. Clearly, this policy of trust no longer exists. There are no new rules or regulations concerning alcohol at Kenyon; rather, the old ones are being consistently enforced. As Dean of Students Craig Bradley pointed out in his all-student email Sept. 12, the Security and Safety staff are simply upholding Ohio state law.

I cannot argue with that point. As a minor, I have no right to buy, possess, or consume alcohol. But what I can call into question is the mood that is pervasive at most campus parties these days. Security has become an ominous presence, lurking outside of parties, waiting to pounce. "It seems like they're looking for trouble," noted a junior woman. I now feel guilty merely entering a party, whether I plan to drink or not. I can understand completely the crackdowns on the Cove, Deli, and Market—what I cannot understand is the new police-state regime that plagues parties, group and apartment alike. At a campus this small and isolated, many of us relish Archon, Peep, and fraternity parties as opportunities to get out and have a good time. The amount of alcohol on almost any given campus in America is frightening, but it is also inevitable. While Dean Bradley is absolutely right in saying that there are sources of non-alcoholic fun available, many people around here (myself included) can be heard asking on a Friday afternoon, "Are there any big parties this weekend?"

Freshman year, I was dazzled by the prospect of dressing up for a party, going out and meeting people. Two years later, I find myself appreciating more and more the idea of private parties and small gatherings of friends. However, this is not to say that I did not have an incredible time at the Archons last weekend, or that I am not going to leap at the next fraternity party that comes along.

Everybody's politics and personal opinions (be they good or bad) aside, the role that fraternities have played in Kenyon's social scene is inevitable. It is a luxury that people can just stop in at a fraternity party and hang out. At many other schools the fraternity parties are invite only, have a cover charge, and charge for their beer. With few exceptions, fraternity parties here are open to virtually the entire campus, which does a great deal towards supporting the "friendly atmosphere" touted in the Prospectus. This casual, easy-going mood at most parties is a rarity, and something to be valued. Much of that has been taken away since we have been back. I strongly feel that the vitriol directed against the Security Department would be significantly diluted if they followed Dean Bradley's lead: be rational, direct and honest, instead of shutting down parties with glee, like some deranged pack of Rescue Rangers.

The drinking is inevitable, since an astonishing number of Kenyon students can track down beer like a bloodhound after Bambi. As one junior put it, "People aren't not drinking—they're just throwing down their beer when Security comes by." When cracking down parties, Security would do well to consider the lengths to which students will go if they are prohibited from drinking in the relatively safe confines of a party. Senior Sonya McKay observed that "drinking is a part of college life, it happens everywhere. It is impossible to avoid. Now that people can't drink, they start driving to bars." Frankly, the idea of someone driving back from Columbus after partying all night scares me a lot more than someone drinking and dancing with a bunch of friends in a dorm lounge.

Chances are high that the issue of alcohol is one without a common ground on the campus. At the moment, the students are angry and resentful, and Security and Safety are not communicating directly with the students. It is natural that the administration is in the middle to mediate, but it would make more sense if the people shutting down the parties were also doing the talking.

Annual Bluegrass Festival Offers Look at Different Style of Music

By James Parr
Senior Staff Reporter

This was a summer of music, from the Woodstock revival in New York, to annual events such as the Lollapalooza and H.O.R.D.E. tours. Last weekend, another great musical event took place in Loudonville, Ohio, just a thirty-minute ride north of Kenyon.

The third annual Mohican Bluegrass Festival offered spectators three days of nearly non-stop music and festivities centered around the grand tradition of folk music. Beginning on the afternoon of Friday the 16th and ending the following Sunday evening, the Festival brought together performers and listeners from across Ohio and the rest of the world.

The performances took place on the single outdoor stage of the Mohican Wilderness Campgrounds. Nestled amidst the trees and hills of rural Ohio, the music was brought to life not only by the musicians, but also by the surroundings.

Over twelve acts performed during the course of the three days, bringing together the talents of both traditional and more avant-garde Bluegrass acts. The Festival was highlighted by a performance from 83-year-old Bill Monroe and his Blue Grass Boys on Saturday evening, veritable legends in the Bluegrass industry. In fact, Monroe is considered the Father of Bluegrass, introducing it to the world in 1939. Over his long career, he has developed a mixed style of fast tunes, waltzes, gospels, duets, solos, and instrumentals.

Younger groups such as Northwest Territory also performed, allowing spectators to see for themselves how bluegrass music has both changed and remained true to its original form over the decades.

Groups like the Gary Ferguson Band from Pennsylvania performed their own stylings of Bluegrass, at times sounding more similar to Country and Western music, or even Jazz, than the other Bluegrass styles.

The trio of The Brother Boys performed their unique blend of vocal harmonies, string bass, and flat-top guitar to delight the crowd of over 200 on Sunday. The group brought more of a Country and Western flavor to the afternoon, at times sounding like early Hank Williams, especially in their adroit renditions of some of his songs.

By far the most engaging and entertaining of Sunday's acts though was Robert White & the Candy Mountain Express, with members hailing from throughout Ohio and the midwest. The group opened up the day with an assortment of gospels by way of bluegrass in commemoration of the Sabbath. They performed their hits "Springtime in Heaven," "Momma's not Dead, She's Just Sleepin'," and the moribund-yet-delightful "The Wreck on the Highway."

The overall feeling of the festival, along with the talent of the performers, created an air of fun and excitement at the show. Even a harsh downpour on Saturday was merely a small distraction from the music and enjoyment of the performers and spectators, who ranged in age from elderly to infant.

Paolo R. Dettwiler, president of the Swiss Bluegrass Music Association centered in Basel, was on hand for the excitement. He commented on the international flair of the Mohican Festival.

"There's just a lot of things to see and hear, and this music is truly wonderful. It's going to be the next big thing in Europe I believe."

Ted Turner, a local promoter of the event who helped build the stage four years ago, is excited by the Festival's future. Turnout for the event has nearly doubled every year, and he hopes that one day the Mohican Festival of Loudonville, Ohio will rival the larger Bluegrass festivals of Winterhawk and Telluride. Members of the Kenyon community will not want to miss out on next year's festival and see what may be the next big thing in Bluegrass music.

Presidential Search Committee Forum Reveals Concern

By Rachel Orr
Senior Staff Reporter

Classes were finally over for the week, it was beautiful outside, and it was Friday. I cannot honestly say that I wanted to review the community forum about the selection of a new president.

Yet I am glad I went, even though I was only one of a handful of students present at the meeting. I now have a much better idea of what is going on in Gambier's political circle, as well as a much larger interest in a subject which will affect us all.

Basically, those present used the opportunity to voice their concerns, and to illuminate possible problems.

One of the major concerns communicated by faculty members pertained to their representation. Many were worried not only by the fact that the chosen committee was not very diverse, but that since the committee members don't know the faculty, how could they possibly represent them?

Apprehension concerning the trustee members of the board was also addressed, because while alumnae were certainly familiar with Kenyon while they were in school, how familiar would they be with new interests, such as the integrated programs and other new areas in academia? This unfamiliarity would make it difficult to define the present college, complicating selection of a new president.

The committee responded that they understood the concerns of the faculty, and that they plan on making themselves known to the community. Criteria they will establish for selecting the president will be made known to the faculty, although they plan to keep a line between retaining confidentiality on behalf of the applicants, and informing the public on their progress.

In regards to the alumnae, one trustee on the board made the point that many alumnae have been in touch with the College since graduation and know where they want to go with the decision. Others will meet with department chairs and faculty members, specifically in the newer departments, in order to become more informed of what is currently happening at Kenyon. The committee spokesperson remarked that being members of the committee will help them learn more about the school as a whole.

Although the issue of representation was a general concern agreed upon by the public, their opinions varied on the qualities they would like the new president to possess. One of the more common traits desired was the resident's ability to understand, as Mr. Rogers' would put it, what makes Kenyon "special." An example was given of a college whose new resident did not understand this, and simply wanted to turn the school into another selective east coast school.

Another person suggested someone "who would be out in the world talking about Kenyon--someone with a sense of visions." There were complaints of continuously being compared to other schools, and somebody suggested appointing a president "who would say with integrity who we are."

The knowledge of a "sense of community" was another vital characteristic in a president, since Kenyon strongly considers the residential community a trait which defines the College. Though most people in Gambier have formed their own notions of what the concept of community means, it seemed to be a widespread agreement that this is a concept the new president must take seriously to heart.

There were other attributes which faculty members believed would not be beneficial to Kenyon. One of those was appointing a "strictly business" person who would only downsize the school. One faculty member instead suggested someone who was not only an administrator but a scholar as well, and thus wouldn't "lose sight of the academic process, (because) progress needs to be made an academic vision." Perhaps it would be someone who, like President Jordan, would continue teaching, conducting seminars in his home, and making him or herself known among the students and faculty. There was also a need to recognize the amount of creative work accomplished by the faculty.

Flexibility was named to be a related trait, because it gets tiring to hear repetitive phrases such as: "That's a good idea, but there isn't any money..."

Finally, the audience wanted someone who held a holistic view of the College, a blend of both the academic and personal sides. However, one faculty member brought up the point that the committee should not burden the selection process with credentials and such, but to be as open as possible, and choose someone who will get the job done.

The forum was very well conducted, and all sides expressed their views directly while still considering rationality and the position of others in the room. The only serious drawback and disappointment was that there was so few members of the student body in the group. Though many may not have had direct contact with President Jordan, certainly most everyone has seen him and his wife around campus, whether attending various events or simply walking their dogs down Middle Path.

There will be forums in the future in which students will be welcome to raise their concerns and find out more information, and students will have a chance to meet with the final round of chosen candidates when they visit the campus later in the school year.

"Finally, the audience wanted someone who held a holistic view of the college, a blend of both the academic and personal sides"

According to Director of Admissions John Anderson, it is very important for the new president to know that Kenyon exists for the students "we are here because they are here."

It is our school, and we should play a role in who is chosen, because it will be someone who will eventually represent Kenyon, our alma mater.

Recent Alums Return for Women's Anniversary Events

By Amy Rich
Senior Staff Reporter

This year's Homecoming will have a special atmosphere due to the many events planned to celebrate the 25th anniversary of women at Kenyon. Planned by a committee of students and members of the faculty, Homecoming Weekend will be the largest on-campus celebration of this anniversary for alumni, students, and staff.

Homecoming "hasn't drawn many people, but this one is of great significance because we are celebrating a huge event in the college's history -- the inclusion of women," said President Philip Jordan.

The first event is a presentation entitled "The Japanese Craze: the Anglo-Japanese Style and Kenyon's Crozier Center" on Friday, September 23, at 4:15 p.m. in the Crozier Center. The presentation will address the renovation and restoration of the Crozier Center for Women and will be given by Jean Dunbar '73, the historic design specialist who volunteered to implement these changes.

Assistant Dean of Students Cheryl Steele explained that, with her renovation and restoration, Dunbar tried to regain the look of the building when it was first constructed in the late 1880's, an era of great American interest in Japanese culture.

In her presentation, Dunbar will explain more about the Center's Anglo-Japanese style as well as discuss how the project came to be. She will also demonstrate how she decided to alter the building's interior so as to make better use of its space rather than creating an addition to the building.

"She deserves so much credit for all her hours of volunteer work," said Steele. Jordan also referred to Dunbar's renovations as "exciting."

The celebration of 25 years of women at Kenyon will continue at 6:00 p.m. on Friday with the singing of "Philander Chase: The Sequel" on the steps of Rosse Hall.

"It should be a fun event," said Barbara Meek, director of campus events in Alumni and Parent Affairs. "We've asked all the singing groups on campus to help."

The song, written by Assistant Director of Admissions Liz Forman '73 and her mother Helen Forman, features an additional verse commemorating the arrival of women at Kenyon that was written for the 25th anniversary.

"I think other alumni should add to the verses," said Forman.

The events of Saturday, September 24, will begin with a historical tour of campus lead by Director of Public Affairs Tom Stamp '73. This year, special attention will be given to the Mather, McBride, and Gund dormitories, the buildings that once comprised the Coordinate College for Women.

Stamp said that the tour focuses on the history of each building and includes amusing anecdotes, such as that of the "Spring Riot," a celebration of spring that resulted in "all the men gathered outside McBride and the women inside cheering them on with Dean Crozier standing between the two groups trying to keep them apart."

Family Histories," will be held on Saturday at 11:00 a.m. in the Seitz House Seminar Room. Miriam Dean-Otting, an assistant professor of religion, will "explore the idea of memoirs, what questions they address, and what issues they raise" by presenting the examples of two Jewish women, one a 17th century German, and the other a 20th century Czech.

The Crozier Center for Women will be open on Saturday from noon to 1:30 p.m. for an open house and "common bond" brunch.

"It should be very informal," said Meek, "and we invite people to come in to see Crozier and meet alumni." She explained that the tea was designed as a time to "talk about the early years when women came to campus" and stressed that both men and women are welcome.

The festivities continue at the Crozier Center with a "Tea and 'Sharing' Party: Reminiscing about Twenty-Five Years of Women at Kenyon," an informal event that Meek also invites everyone to attend.

During half-time of the Saturday football game between the Lords and the Denison Big Red, Wilder Track, which surrounds McBride Field, will be dedicated in honor of star athlete Kelley Wilder '93. After the game, a new women athletes trophy case will be unveiled in Ernst Center.

The Homecoming celebration of 25 years of women at Kenyon will conclude at 6:30 p.m. with a banquet and recognition program in the Gund Commons dining hall. The banquet will feature Jordan's reflections on changes at Kenyon in his 20 years as president, discussion of other events related to the women's anniversary planned for later this year, and an open microphone for people to share their experiences at Kenyon.

Both men and women are welcome at all of these events, Meek emphasized. see WOMEN page twelve

Music King, Hollywood Squares to Provide Entertainment at Homecoming

By Brandon J. Ice
Staff Reporter

"Homecoming has not always been that big of a deal in the past."

So said Barbara Meek, director of campus events in Alumni and Parent Affairs.

This year, however, she hopes a number of different entertainment events, planned with both alumni and students in mind, will reverse that perception.

Meek, who is new to Kenyon this year, has spearheaded the effort behind this year's celebration. She feels that this year's combination of events will give Homecoming the jump-start it needs to make it a bigger and better celebration for all involved.

To kick off Homecoming events, an all-campus picnic with entertainment by the "Music King" — a professional emcee and disc jockey duo — will begin on Friday at 4:30 p.m. on the lawn between Hanna and Leonard Halls. Music from the past 25 years, line-dancing lessons, and large video screens will be just a few of the entertainment offerings.

Following the picnic, at 7:00 p.m., a Kenyon rendition of Hollywood Squares, which featured Mount Vernonite Paul Lynde, will be presented in the front facade of Old Kenyon. Alumni, faculty, administration and student "celebrities" will answer questions pertaining to the College's history from the nine center windows of the dorm.

Afterward, at 9:00 p.m., the annual Homecoming bonfire will light the South Quad with a number of the student singing groups providing entertainment.

Sporting events dominate Saturday's Homecoming events. On Saturday at 9:00 a.m., the ninth annual Alumni-Varsity Swimming Team Triathlon will be held at Ernst Center.

At 10:00 a.m., the Kenyon baseball alumni will take on the 94-95 Kenyon Lords baseball team at McKloskey Field.

For their first home game, the Kenyon Lords football team will battle the Denison Big Red at McBride Field at 1:30 p.m.

From 10:00 a.m. to 11:00 a.m. on Saturday, an open forum on the Presidential search process will take place in the Biology Auditorium. The presidential search committee would like to gather alumni and community opinion regarding the direction in which Kenyon should be steered in addition to the qualities desired in the next president.

Discussions on "What Can I Do with a Kenyon Education and My Major?" will be led by alumni for students in various rooms in Ascension Hall at 1:30 p.m. Immediately following the event, which is organized by the Career Development Center, an informal reception will be held in Philomathesian Hall of Ascension.

To bring the Homecoming weekend to a close, Cleveland-based band "Odd Girl Out" — described by some as a blend of new age and punk rock — will provide entertainment in Gund Commons Lounge from 9:00 p.m. until 1:00 a.m. for students and alumni.

Many opportunities for interaction with alumni are being made possible to the student body throughout the weekend. Sophomore Gretchen Baker, coordinator of the Student-Alumni Association, said she hopes that students will take advantage of such opportunities.

"The alumni have so much to offer the students in way of first-hand experience and knowledge," she said. "Communication between the two groups would well serve all."

ICS, Library Staff to Demonstrate Research Power of the Internet at Olin

By Scott E. Siddall
Dir. of Academic Computing

In the next few months, several workshops will be offered at Kenyon on the Internet, World Wide Web, and creating your own hypertext documents.

Those of us in the library and ICS who offer these workshops are often asked, "Why should I attend one of these? What's in it for me?"

The answer depends on many criteria, including what you need to accomplish, the research methods of your discipline, and your personal style of learning. You can collaborate with others of similar interests. You can search databases for specific information. You can acquire full text, audio and video clips. You can even create your own multimedia documents and make them available to a potentially global audience.

So what exactly is the Internet? The Internet is simply a global network of many smaller, interconnected computer networks, all of which use compatible "languages" called communication protocols. This common-ality of communication protocols makes it possible to exchange information easily.

The Internet is relatively young and has grown very rapidly - 1000% in the past five years - without central ownership. By some estimates, there are as many as 7 million computers connected to the Internet, with as many as 30 million users of Internet services in 100 countries. (We refer to this as a global network, but keep in mind that 30 million is only 0.6% of the human population.)

The chaotic and anarchic nature of the Internet is in part the basis for the great potential of the Internet. Anyone connected to the Internet is able to access and provide information in new and exciting ways that were unimaginable just a few years ago.

But this chaotic nature can also be one of the most frustrating aspects as well. Librarians have worked for centuries to organize printed information; the Internet expands and changes so fast (literally each day!) that no one has been able to catalogue it, nor has anyone been able to establish a comprehensive scheme for such a Herculean cataloging effort.

So back to the original question: what's in it for you?

One reason to be interested in Internet resources is that you can access information you need quickly and frequently at little or no cost. Imagine there exists a global "web" of network-accessible information and that you find a starting place in this web by doing a simple keyword search. We'll call this a "home page" since it often is a document created by someone at your institution. Imagine then being able to leap from topic to topic without any technical obstacles to your efforts.

Such free movement is possible because each important term in this home page is linked to other documents. These links can take you to a document wherever it is stored on the Internet - from your local computer to systems thousands of miles away.

Where that information is stored may not be important to you, however because you can access it quickly. Skip what you already know and pursue what is new to you.

Gather citations, read text, listen to audio, interact with graphical simulations, interact with others, view video clips, all in a way that suits your style of learning.

This scenario is acted out thousands of times each day, right now.

The "web" is called the World Wide Web, started several years ago at the European Laboratory for Particle Physics in Geneva. Software that makes "browsing" the web easy is located in the public domain - in other words, it is free. (Direct connections to the Internet are not without cost, however; ICS is working to expand this level of access to the campus as fast as resources will allow).

Another reason to be interested in the Internet is that you can present your work to the global Internet community for review and comment. For instance, everything in KCInfo is accessible to anyone on the Internet, including the Hitchcock Annual Review (published by Christopher Brookhouse) and the 280 page workbook see INTERNET page twelve

New OCS Director Wants More Involvement from Seniors

Hamlet Sees 'Keeping My Blinders on in My Own Little Nation' Unfeasible

By Eva McClellan
Staff Reporter

Approximately 150 students annually study off-campus in either another country or a different part of the United States. As of July, that integral part of a Kenyon student's education took a new direction.

Barbara Hamlet, the new interim director of International Education, has been busy modifying aspects of the Off-Campus Studies (OCS) program. To date she has held a pre-orientation program for international students and an informational meeting with sophomores looking to travel abroad.

These are only two examples of her duties, however. The entirety of her position extends to overseeing all OCS programs and attending to the needs of the international students on campus.

Hamlet's life has been a compliment to her job. She was born in Guyana, "the land of many waters." After high school, she took a civil service exam and served as secretary in Guyana's Department of Forestry, Lands and Mines. A week after her marriage to a ministerial student, she and her husband moved to Canada.

Since then, Hamlet has lived in such places such as Puerto Rico, Illinois, and Nigeria and held such positions as communications assistant and administrative assistant in the Department of Aeronautical and Astronomical Engineering.

In 1976, she received her B.A. cum laude in cultural anthropology at the State University of New York in Buffalo and continued as a graduate teacher at St. John's Grammar School in Nigeria. Hamlet was most recently assistant dean and Coordinator of International Programs at Denison University in Granville, Ohio, where she still resides today.

After five years at Denison (1985-1990), she enrolled at the School for international training in a master's program in

International Administration with a concentration in development management and intercultural training. She recently completed her thesis entitled "Of, By, With and For the People: Towards A Redefinition of Authentic and Sustainable Development."

While working on her master's, Hamlet worked as manager of educational development at Aurora Associates, Inc., in Washington, D.C.

As interim director at Kenyon, she works closely with Assistant Director of International Education Marilyn Stokes. "With the assistance of peer advisors," remarked Hamlet, "we encourage students to view off-campus study as an important part of their academic experience."

Hamlet herself manifests the qualities necessary for relations with people of different nations. "I think I have a great capacity to empathize with people," she stated. "I fit in quite easily in different cultures, different places, without a lot of problems."

She is pleased with the excellent foundation laid down by past director Jane Wemhoener. "One of the things I am very happy about is the kind of commitment I have seen to international education on this campus," she explained. The courses and financial aid assistance offered to OCS students was a very encouraging greeting, noted Hamlet.

However, there still exists room for change. Her goal is to bring past and future OCS students and the international students together. Such a goal is already becoming a reality.

Hamlet related that she encountered a recently returned student whose inspiration for his thesis came from a class taken overseas. At one of OCS's roundtable discussions, he met an international student from the same area in which he had studied. What came of their conversation was valuable for both.

"That kind of interaction" between OCS and international students, explained Hamlet, is what she hopes to encourage. "Getting (that) kind of informal information from international students about some aspect of that country" is very important, she said.

She also hopes to increase the on-campus activity of the returning students. "I'd like to have more opportunities for our returning students. I think so often we do not complete the circle. That is, we prepare students to go off-campus, they go off-campus, and they return."

Students often do not return and resume their pre-OCS lifestyle, emphasized Hamlet. Many return with more independence and with a different view of the world and their own life. Hamlet noted, for example, that some sophomores leave after spending the weekend after weekend partying. When they return as seniors, they discover that they do not want to continue that way of life any more.

"The community can gain quite a bit from the experiences of these students," she added.

In order to study off-campus, students are advised to look toward the future with a specific plan in mind. Begin to carefully select your classes now so when you return from off-campus studies, you will be right on track, advised Hamlet.

"OCS has become very competitive," she explained. "Students must be able to articulate how an OCS program will fit into their academic program here at Kenyon."

Noting the immense change the world has recently undergone, Hamlet observed, "When you consider the interdependence of our world, it is not feasible to 'just keep my blinders on in my own little nation.' The essence of a liberal arts education is to throw off the blinders and broaden students' view."

According to Hamlet, off-campus study is an ideal way to do that. "It's one thing to read about some group in Brazil and it's another thing to actually live there and speak the language," she said.

Hamlet recounted that one student, upon returning, told her, "I discovered for the first time the 'humanness' of us all."

That student, along with many others she said, gained a necessary appreciation for other cultures and places they never thought about before.

"In a nutshell," Hamlet said of off-campus studies, "it's important for our survival."

Finke Explores Vaults, Archives of England for Medieval Manuscripts

By Brooks Martin
Staff Reporter

Associate Professor of Gender and Women's Studies Laurie Finke received a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) earlier this year to fund her research for a book on women writers in the Middle Ages. Her grant, apart from providing support for two months of research, included a certain allotment of travel money which allowed her to study overseas.

Her nomination for the grant was made by the Faculty Affairs Committee at Kenyon, which convenes and selects three Kenyon professors to be considered by the NEH annually. The NEH then chooses recipients through evaluation of written proposals by each nominated professor.

Finke, who has a Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania, explained, "The NEH is a federally funded granting agency which is designed to give grants to both individuals and programs in the humanities:

literature, philosophy, linguistics, history, and other fields that may use methods or information from the humanities."

Her "summer stipend," as it is called, allowed Finke to travel to England, where most of the works that she needed to study exist only in unedited, unpublished manuscripts. She studied at the vaults and archives of the British Museum in London, the Bodleian at Oxford University, and the library at Cambridge University, all of which contain large collections of original manuscripts written in the Middle Ages.

Finke's two months of research, however, were not entirely trouble-free. Many of the works that she needed were not in widely published anthologies. Instead, they existed only in the forms of individual manuscripts kept in the vaults of various libraries.

She also ran into several unexpected problems. "People in the humanities don't often have to deal with methodological problems," she observed.

One of these problems revolved around her subject: women writers in English in the Middle Ages. But what qualified as English in the Middle Ages? Not everybody in the medieval period spoke English; for two centuries most people spoke French.

"Could I look at French things? For instance, could I look at Marie de France, who was a member of Henry II's court? She wrote in Anglo-Norman (and) she was from England, but she called herself from France," Finke explained.

There was also the problem of whether Finke should use those items which were written on the continent of Europe by women but were translated into English. One such writer in whom she was particularly interested was Christine de Pisan, a 15th century writer in France who was a Royalist, pro-French writer for the king of France.

Finke said that it was interesting to look at the translations of her works and establish who was translating and why. Most of the people who were translating her works were members of the English aristocracy who used her works to argue that England should invade France.

Her concentration eventually fell to women who wrote in English, women whose works were in other languages but lived in England, and women from neighboring countries whose works were translated into English.

Finke, who begins her third year at Kenyon, also examined women as translators. Many times it was difficult to see FINKE page twelve

New Coach Detchon Aims to Return to Final Four

By Mark Haggarty and Jessica Buckholz
Staff Reporters

Kenyon's athletic department has added a new member this season, brought in to coach one of Kenyon's most powerful sports teams back to the NCAA Final Four. His name is Jack Detchon, and he is the new head coach of the Kenyon mens' soccer program. His ambitions for the squad are high as the Lords battle for a return trip to the national tournament.

Detchon arrived in the United States only fourteen months ago from England, where he has lived most of his life. A soccer player from a very young age, Detchon was named last spring to fill the coaching vacancy left after former coach Fran O'Leary moved on to become Dartmouth's head coach.

Detchon says he is already fascinated by the student body and the community atmosphere that surrounds Kenyon College. He is impressed with the learning facilities and the general attitude of everyone who makes up the school and the Gambier community.

The amiable and generous atmosphere will hopefully assist Detchon in achieving his main objective here - to coach a winning soccer team. Considering the teams the Lords have fielded in the past few seasons, that shouldn't be a difficult goal to meet.

Now that the season has begun, Detchon has wasted no time, already beginning the process of recruiting for next season as the 1994 schedule gets underway. A veteran on both the field and the sidelines, Detchon has a physical education degree and has been a certified Football Association coach in England since 1966 (in case you were living under a rock this summer and missed the

"The problem with breaking into collegiate soccer in the U.S.," Detchon said, "stems from credibility."

After making that decision, Detchon began to try and break in to American soccer circles. While at a National Soccer Coaches Association (NSCA) clinic, Detchon ran into O'Leary, an old acquaintance. When O'Leary decided to go to Dartmouth, he let Detchon know — and the rest is history.

When asked about his goals and outlook for the coming soccer season, Detchon replied, "[We] got to the national tournament last year and that's what our goal is now. We're to get to the finals and win it...this year, next year, and the year after that!"

Detchon tempered that by saying that a coach "is not an alchemist. I can't do it all. Games are won by the players." He is proud of the team he has fielded thus far, and hopes to continue the successes of recent seasons. Assisted by returning coach Milton Gooding and senior veteran Leigh Sillery, the Lords have a solid coaching staff to carry them this fall. Hopefully, Detchon will help Kenyon soccer move up to an even higher level.

A coach "is not an alchemist. I can't do it all. Games are won by the players."

After playing professional football for Division I Chesterfield and Division I Nottingham Forest, Detchon has spent 25 years associated with football in England, including 12 as a full-time coach. He coached the English national junior team (under 18) and scouted English players for the World Cup team in 1990.

A little over a year ago, Detchon decided he wanted to coach in the United States.

Field hockey

One goal midway through the first and another thirty seconds before the end of the game was enough for the College of Wooster to claim a 2-0 victory over the Ladies in a North Coast Athletic Conference (NCAC) field hockey game last Saturday.

The Ladies attempted 18 shots — only five fewer than the Lady Scots — but could not mount a comeback.

On Sunday, the team dropped a non-conference game to the University of Rochester, 4-0.

Against Wittenberg on Tuesday, the Ladies again fell short, losing a tough contest by the score of 3-2. First-year student-athlete Phoebe Walker and sophomore Lindsay Buchanan each tallied their first goals of the season. But the Tigers' lead was too much to overcome, even as the Ladies surged offensively in the last few minutes.

The Ladies (2-5, 2-3 NCAC) play at the Seven Sisters Tournament Haverford (PA) College this weekend. They return to Waite Field on Wednesday, October 5 against Oberlin at 4:30 p.m.

Men's Soccer

The men's soccer team recorded a major victory last week, defeating Bethany College on the Bisons' home field, 4-0.

The Lords (4-0-1), currently ranked 12th in the Division III poll, extended their regular-season winning streak to 25 consecutive games. Their last loss in the regular season was October 17, 1992 — a 2-1 defeat at Bethany.

Sophomore Wayne Albertyn struck first for the Lords, scoring in the 24th minute; fellow sophomore Tony Mohammed added to the lead nine minutes later.

Senior goalie Andy Kingston had five saves in the contest, while the defense limited Bethany to only nine shots on goal.

Senior Mark Phillips and sophomore Isaac Gowin rounded out the scoring for the Lords, each tallying an unassisted goal in the second half.

Results of Wednesday's game against Case Western Reserve University were unavailable at presstime. The Lords play Mt. Vernon Nazarene on Friday at 4 p.m. and Hiram on Saturday at 3:30. Both games will be played on Mavee Field.

Volleyball

The women's volleyball team had a tough week last week, losing all four of their matches in the Great Lakes Colleges Association (GLCA) Tournament at DePauw University over the weekend.

The Ladies (3-9) took Albion (MI) to a 3-game match, winning the first game 15-9 but dropping the second two, 14-16 and 12-15. Another close match came against Kalamazoo, by a score of 5-15, 14-16.

The ladies team will play again this weekend at the Ohio Wesleyan Invitational. The next home match for the Ladies will be Thursday the 29th at 6 p.m. against Anderson College.

Women's Soccer

The women's soccer is continuing its run of early-season success, improving its record to 6-1 overall.

The Ladies defeated Marietta, 3-1, but lost to Wilmington College last Saturday by a score of 3-1. Despite the loss, the teams still posts the best record in the NCAC with a week left before the conference playing begins.

Junior striker Hilary Marx remains atop the conference scoring standings, with 12 goals and six assists in seven games. First-year student-athletes Laurie Danner and Amy Hall are third and fourth, respectively in their ranking.

The Ladies play at Ohio Northern University this Saturday. Their next home game is Friday the 30th against Bethany at 4 p.m. on Mavee Field.

Cross Country

Both the men's and women's cross country teams participated in the GLCA Championships, held at Earlham last weekend.

Senior Aaron Derry posted the Lords' best finish, placing second in a time of 26:44. Derry's time was the best among NCAC participants.

The Lords finished eighth overall in the meet.

Sophomore Keri Schulte led the Ladies, finishing third in 19:56. The team finished second behind Hope, which is ranked fifth nationally.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Mark Phillips

Senior Mark Phillips scored a total of nine goals in Wednesday's soccer match against the Case Western Reserve Spartans. Seven of the goals were consecutive and resulted in a 12-0 victory for the Lords.

Football Improves To 1-1 With 28-0 Shutout at Oberlin

By Fred Bierman and
James Hall
Staff Reporters

Kenyon quarterback Brad Hensley shattered four Kenyon career records as the football team defeated Oberlin 28-0 last Saturday afternoon. In addition to Hensley's performance, the defense held the Yeomen to -22 yards, picking up Kenyon's first shutout since 1986.

Head Coach Jim Meyer was certainly pleased with his team's performance. "This game was a once-in-a-career-game," he said. "I've never coached anything like it."

Last season, opposing teams had a great deal of success running the ball against the Kenyon defense. With the advent of a new defensive strategy, the Lords did fairly well against Grove City and put on a sensational show of strength in the Oberlin game.

This new defensive strategy brought the team success in stopping the Yeomen. This season's lineup includes smaller but faster players than in previous years campaigns; that speed helped the Lords make 13 sacks and limit the Yeomen to zero positive yards.

Senior tri-captain Brett Brownscombe said, "It's definitely an improvement from last year. The aggressiveness makes the game more exciting. We already have more total sacks in two games than we had all of last year."

Hensley led the offensive onslaught. Against the Yeomen, Hensley completed 16 of 21 passes for 217 yards and threw three touchdown passes, all to Colby Penzone. He broke four Kenyon career records: most plays (1359), most net total yards (6176), most passing yards (6444), and most passes completed (567).

Coach Meyer said of his star quarterback, "[Brad] is a very unselfish player. He doesn't go in there thinking about breaking records; he would trade stats for wins any day. Even though he has had a lot of success, he'll be the first to credit his players."

Despite his accomplishments on the field, Hensley remains focused on the team's success.

"I try not to think about these things and let the coaches worry about it," Hensley said. "If they [the records] fall, they fall."

The offensive line put in a stellar performance behind Hensley. "This was the second true test of the offensive line," said junior offensive lineman Aasem Khalil. "We pulled together to give Brad the time he needed to execute his passes."

The Lords evened their record to 1-1, starting off their NCAC season at 1-0. In addition—and perhaps equally importantly—the Lords sustained no injuries and even able to rest some of the starters against a fairly competitive team. The shellacking of the Yeomen also allowed Meyer to play some the younger members of the squad.

This Saturday the Lords hope to chew up the Big Red of Denison and keep their undefeated conference record intact.

"When Denison looks at the film of our Oberlin game, I'm sure it will instill some fear in their hearts," Brownscombe said.

"Against Grove City our team had the pre-game jitters," he continued. "We seemed to care more about not losing than we did about winning. The win on Saturday gave us some confidence, and we hope to give the Big Red a hard time."

Saturday's game begins at 1:30 p.m. at McBride Field.

Ladies Soccer Presses on, Faces Challenges in Future

By Laura Glennie
Staff Reporter

The Kenyon ladies soccer team suffered their first loss against top-ranked Wilmington College in a non conference game last Saturday. Although the ladies lost the game 1-3 against the lady Quakers, they still hold an impressive 6-1-0 record so far this season.

The Ladies traveled to Wilmington, Ohio where they faced probably their toughest opponent this year. In the first half, the second ranked Ladies held a 1-0 lead after junior Laura Noah scored a goal assisted by first-year Amy Hall. In the second half, the ladies threatened to pull away, holding Wilmington scoreless until the final thirty-five minutes of the game. Two of Kenyon's second half shots bounced off the goalpost, allowing Wilmington to come away with the 3-1 victory and a record of 6-0 for the season.

Wilmington's three goals are three of the only five goals scored on the Ladies the entire season. Goalie junior Stacy Strauss produced a season high of twenty-one saves and helped in the awesome effort given by the Ladies against the undefeated Lady Quakers.

"It was a disappointing loss for us, but an encouraging one," said Coach Paul Wardlaw. "But, we played as hard as we could and gave quite an effort against a very good opponent," he added.

However, Ladies' soccer was victorious yesterday in their first conference game against Case Western Reserve, 2-1. Junior Hillary Marx championed both goal while first-year Amy Hall provided two assists for the Ladies.

Senior Co-Captain Kate Comerford comments "We outshot them and outplayed them but we didn't score as much as we would like."

Sadly the team will greatly miss junior Laura Noah in Saturday's away game against Ohio Northern. Noah, in the last few minutes of the match against Case, sprained an ankle.

According to Comerford the match against Ohio Northern will pose some challenges for the Ladies. "We are evenly matched teams so it will be a good match," notes Comerford. "Last year we beat them 2-0, but they are a better team this year."

The Ladies next home game will be Sept. 30 against Bethany College.

Lords Soccer Rout Case Western Spartans 12-0

By James Murray
Special to the Collegian

Lords' soccer posted an impressive 12-0 shut-out over the visiting Case Western Reserve Spartans yesterday. Senior Co-Captain Mark Phillips paved the way with nine of the first 10 goals.

"Definite All-American performance," exclaims senior Tom Frick regarding Phillips' play.

The Lords got on track quickly as Phillips gave them a 2-0 lead in the first half. Sophomore Jason Sellers provided the third goal with Dave DeSchryver's assist. The next seven goals belong to Phillips.

Mark Toews scored as Jesse Hardman lobbed the ball over the defense, and it was off to the races for Toews as he blew by the Spartan defenders. Hardman also got on the scoreboard with a goal of his own, coming off a cross from Jon Moody.

There was also a great defensive effort in this 12-0 rout against the Spartans. Everyone on the defense played a solid game, including senior Andy Kingston supplying the shut-out as goal-keeper. However poor Case played, Kingston still achieved his sixth shut-out in six games and maintained the lead in the NCAC for goals against average. "Kingston deserves a great deal of credit with his six shutouts, and leadership", states Frick on Kingston's activity in net thus far in the season.

DeSchryver commented after the game, "I felt as if we played like muskrats in water", and wanted to congratulate everyone on playing a solid game. This 12 goal victory can only improve the Lords of second place standing in the NCAC, due to the 0-0 tie against Kalamazoo. This tie is the only blemish in the Lords undefeated season of 5-0-1.

The team looks forward to continuing in the same manner Friday against the cross town rival, Mount Vernon Nazarene College, as they did against the Spartans of Case Western Reserve. Dave DeSchryver, speaking for the Lords, wish to thank you for your enthusiasm, and want to encourage more of it in the future.

And finally, you may be interested in these new information technologies because scholars are debating the role information technology will play in a liberal arts education. Technologies that enable students to be more active learners may cast instructors in the new role (for some) of mentor, guide and information resource specialist rather than merely as lecturer.

Information technologies, of which the Internet is but one example, are creating new opportunities to learn anytime, anywhere. These technologies are rich with potential for the academic enterprise, but they bring great challenges as well.

distinguish which works were written by women, especially since most medieval authors did not include their name with their manuscript, she said.

According to Finke, the subject of a work was not always indicative of the author's gender. There exist treatises on all aspects of hunting and warfare, many of which were written by women.

Finke's book, tentatively entitled Women's Writing in English in the Middle Ages, is due at the publisher by December of 1995.

Craig Bradley, dean of students said, "While it is most appropriate that Kenyon is ranked in the top tier of National Liberal Arts Colleges, I continue to believe that the rankings are an absurd exercise of splitting hairs with a breadknife; institutional quality and diversity are much harder to define than is possible using a simple quantitative tally.

"Nonetheless, many high school students and their parents read this report, so it has influence. We can't pretend that it is irrelevant even if we believe its real value as a guidance tool is limited."

Provost Jim Gunton commented, "I am of course absolutely delighted but not surprised of their ranking of us. As a newcomer to Kenyon, I think I can safely say that Kenyon deserves to be ranked even more highly, as it is an outstanding national liberal arts college."
