Freshman plans to establish television station at Kenyon

By Dave Algar

The possibility for a cable television station at Kenyon is currently under discussion. The idea for this potential extracurricular medium belongs to Brendan Keefe, a freshman with extensive experience in video production and broadcast journalism.

Keefe's interest in video led him to contact Spidick, Audio-Visual Coordinator. Spidick was apparently receptive to the concept of a cable access at Kenyon and if a television station were established, agreed to serve as faculty moderator for the club. He remained unavailable for comment at press time.

Still, much red tape remains before students can begin to tune into KCTV, the tentative name for the station.

First, the Student Affairs Committee must officially recognize KCTV as a Kenyon extracurricular organization. Keefe doesn’t see this step as a major obstacle if the proper forms are completed. Student Council President Chris Martens remarks, “I think the problem is done in approval, it will come in financing.”

The monetary issue appears to be the most controversial one. Martens expects a television station would be considered an “primary” organization, the designation given to the most heavily funded of Council’s approximately 50 clubs. “We are not adequately able to provide for all of the needs of the other primary organizations,” Martens explains.

Keefe projects that “we’ll barely need any money at all to start the station.” According to a written plan he presented to the Student Affairs Committee, FCC law states that local cable companies must provide public access at no cost for any noncommercial party who shows interest. “They have to give us whatever we need to broadcast as much public access as we want,” states Keefe.

Keefe has met with President Jordan about the TV possibility from whom he learned that the College’s attorneys could help in drafting a formal request for public access to the Star Cable Company, a Jacksonport, Ohio firm. Depending on the company’s resistance, the station could begin operations as soon as this year or as late as a few years, Keefe predicts.

The issue of costly capital expenditures for equipment is another issue which Keefe believes is easily answered. The school currently owns all the video production equipment necessary for broadcast, according to Keefe. The matter, one in which Spidick’s involvement will be crucial, will be in allowing the use of the expensive equipment to the station.

The site for a potential studio has yet to be decided. The new Audio-Visual Center in the Otin Library, the existing studio in the Public Relations Center and Philomathesian Hall are all possibilities Keefe has mentioned.

Martens holds two additional concerns. “We won’t begin unless we can get a really good studio,” he says.

WKCO hopes for AP wire service

By Mike Ueland

If WKCO is able to obtain a subscription to the Associated Press wire service, Kenyon and the surrounding community may soon have access to up-to-the-minute news coverage.

The service, which provides international, domestic and regional news and weather twenty-four hours a day would allow WKCO to provide current updates and expanded news coverage.

As part of the expanded news coverage, for comprehensive news programs, each twenty minutes long, would take place daily. This new format is intended to replace the previous year’s format where disc jockeys read written newspaper articles over the air. According to Bill Horner, WKCO’s station manager at WKCO, this practice of re-reading articles involved “an incredible time expenditure as well as some potential legality.”

Although not anticipated in their budget proposal for the 1986-87 school year, WKCO will be able to provide part of the money needed to purchase the $4,700 wire service by re-allocating funds in their existing budget, if granted an additional sum in this semester’s supplemental budget hearings. In reference to WKCO’s request, Horners claims, “Student Council seemed receptive to the idea at the time of their decision to allow reallocation within the WKCO-FM budget.”

When the proposal for a wire service is just one of a series of changes at WKCO this semester. In the preceding three years, Horner says WKCO concentrated on upgrading any of the technical aspects of the station such as changing to a stereo transmission, increasing wattage and purchasing new equipment.

Horner adds that this year they will focus on “improving the sound quality.” In an attempt to have a more intellectual sound, Dave Wilder, news director at WKCO, says they have expanded their educational programming to include shows like “Collegiate Call-in,” which will be directly affected by the wire service’s arrival.

Horner advocates that WKCO not be the only media organization on campus affected by its recent acquisition, but that the Collegian will also be able to utilize the machine as a source for up-to-date news reports. Because of its recent controversy, Horner has opinions regarding the value of this service to contact the station.

Student Council Treasurer Wilshirth points out that WKCO is asking for approximately 40% of the supplementary budget. “Twenty-five organizations are asking for some $14,000, only $5,200 of which is available,” claims Wilshirth.

Grace period consideration continues

By Thad Camp

The issue once again this year is grace period. Officially, as of this year, it is defined in the Student Handbook as: “a period of time when instructors normally do not require work of any scale beyond that necessary for normal daily participation in classes, seminars, and laboratories.”

It is important to distinguish grace period from reading days; they are two entirely different, though not completely unrelated, things. Reading days are at the end of the semester during which classes do not meet, while classes do meet during grace period.

Another popular misconception about grace period is that professors are not allowed to assign papers or schedule examinations during this time period. This used to be true, but, as of last year, it was altered. As the policy lives it is easy answered. The school currently owns all the video production equipment necessary for broadcast, according to Keefe. The matter, one in which Spidick’s involvement will be crucial, will be in altering the use of the expensive equipment to the station.

The site for a potential studio has yet to be decided. The new Audio-Visual Center in the Otin Library, the existing studio in the Public Relations Center and Philomathesian Hall are all possibilities Keefe has mentioned.

The Student Affairs Committee has set up a sub-committee to discuss the matter. The sub-committee is expected to report back to Council this week.

Health Service needs clarification

Many students have complained about the overcrowding problem at the Health and Counseling Center. According to the Student Handbook, the Health Service is "available to students for routine and emergency treatment." From this statement, it appears that the Health and Counseling Center should function as a full-service medical clinic. However, this definition does not coincide with that of the Administration. According to Dean Edwards, the Health Service was never designed to replace the "family physician" or a "health care unit." Rather, its chief function, aside from counseling, is to respond to students "immediate needs." Edwards sees the source of the overcrowding problem arising from the discrepancy between the students' view of the functions of the Health Service and the Health Service's actual design (as created by the Administration). According to Edwards, the students view the Health Service as functioning similarly to a family practitioner. He also added that the accessibility of the health service adds to the problem. It would seem that a reasonable solution to the problem would be to increase the Health Service staff, especially adding another doctor to the staff. But this idea is not supported by the Administration. By adding an additional full-time doctor, the Health Service will assume the role of family practice. Edwards feels that it is not the College's place to provide such a service. In addition, the financial considerations are no more appealing. Adding an additional doctor will obviously increase costs. However, the question of where one draws the line between "immediate needs" and "family practice" needs to be answered. Obviously, this is not clear to the student body. It appears that: this is not even clear to the Administration for: Edward's definition differs from that printed in the handbook. If the Health Service can diagnose infectious diseases (as it can have been done in the past), are they not servicing more than just the student's immediate needs? It appears so. In addition, because of the small area of the campus and the large concentration of students living in single buildings, infections spread rather rapidly. The overcrowding of the Health Service at certain times is evidence of this fact. In order to efficiently meet the needs of the student body, especially during the above mentioned periods, it would appear that an increased staff is the only option.

The views of the Health Service staff on this matter could not be obtained because they did not have the time to talk to us. However, they did mention that the new scheduling system appointments can be made only two weeks a month instead of the previous five was designed to lessen the congestion. By having more appointments on a "first come, first serve" basis, the health service staff feels that only the truly sick students will spend the little waiting to see the doctor. However, this raises another important point. How can students decide if they are truly sick? Admittedly, many students go to Health Service for minor ailments. However, how can a student decide if he/she is on the verge of a serious viral infection or a simple cold? Only a trained health professional can diagnose such a case. Consequently, we can see no alternative but to increase the Health Service staff.

This editorial was not meant in any way to criticize the abilities of the Health Service staff. On the contrary, their ability to handle the conditions is a tribute to their talents.

The Kenyon Collegian encourages letters to the Editor. All submissions must be signed and typed, double spaced. The Editor reserves the right to edit all material while maintaining the original intent of the submission.

Yearbooks will arrive by break

To the Student Body:

This letter is to inform you of the present status of the 1986 REVIEILLE. The official mailing date has been set, and the yearbooks will arrive on campus a week before winter break. Although production and publishing delays prevented the 1986 REVIEILLE editions from arriving earlier in the fall, the wait is worthwhile.

I would also like to remind the Student Body that everyone who was enrolled at Kenyon during the 1985-86 school year is entitled to receive a copy of REVIEILLE. When the books arrive next month, notices will be posted in Newark and in the dining halls as to the exact times and locations students may pick up their yearbooks. If anyone has any questions feel free to contact me at PBX 2499. Thank you for your patience and I hope you enjoy the 1986 REVIEILLE.

Halloween prank criticized

To the Editors:

Those few of us who stumbled down to breakfast at Gurd on Saturday morning were rudely awakened by windows decorated with soap—complete with large phallic symbol and a discreetly placed waasara.

I appreciate that Halloween is a night of revelry; that's fine. When that revelry turns to obscenity and then to hatred, my opinion is that the fun has gone too far.

Sincerely,
Paul Singer

Reader voices pet pees

To The Editors:

The "Voices of the Tower" column about the pet peeves of the Collegian staff which appeared in the Oct. 23 issue almost brought me to tears. Can a newspaper of such a distinguished liberal arts college even think to print such a piece? The article, directed and obviously meaningful, was only a flavor for entertainment. It is yes, let the space could have been omitted by leaving it blank. This article was only amusing to the staff and their close friends. I thought the newspaper was for the benefit of the whole school/community. After reading this I realized new heights of juvenile high writing creativity had been reached. I, for one, and many others could care less if the editors don't like the way their pop-tarts are frosted.

Sincerely,
Amy Pospeck '89

Bolton production of 'The Birthday Party' a success

By Carolyn Harper

"The Birthday Party," one of Harold Pinter's plays, is like others of his earlier plays, an exploration of man's most private terrains. When it first opened in 1957, the play was castigated by critics and audiences alike, one early performance, in fact, played to an audience of six. The play was later reopened to a more positive reception, and has since been widely reproduced in both Europe and the United States.

The play opens in the sitting room of a tawdry seaside resort run by an equally shabbily older couple. The seeds of jealousy in the setting, which remains the same throughout, provide a sharp contrast to the strange, melodramatic and somewhat ambiguous goings-on in the room. Matthew Roberts and Susan Walker are completely credible and humorously as the owners of the house. While Walker tends to overtact a bit, this is in keeping with her role as the overbearing, overaffectionate landlady. Roberts epitomizes the lower class working man, as he reads his paper to the incessant chatting of his wife. Together, Walker and Roberts endow the play with much of its humor as they putter about the house oblivious to what is really happening. Kate McCann, as Lulu, also puts on a completely humorous and believable performance as the neighborhood floozie. One cannot help but think of the way the songbirds lift her hips and lips coquettishly with whomever is available. Her performance, at the end as the "fallen woman" is equally effective.

The central character is Stanley Weber, played by Gerard Lynn in his debut performance at Kenyon. Lynn's performance is one of the highlights of the play; he seems tailor-made for the fearful, childlike role of Stanley. As his fear and bewilderment increase, so does that of the audience, and we become drawn into Stanley's character, feeling sympa-thy, even pain for him as the play progresses.

The play deals largely with some kind of "organization." Although it is never revealed just what this organization is, it is obviously something of which to be afraid. The organization is represented by Goldberg and McCann; as soon as they enter the stage, one becomes aware of some vague threat. Perhaps it is the unreasonable nervousness of McCann, altered by Chris Toft, as he pulls off his cap violently. The highlight of the play is the mock trial of Stanley by these two "mobsters." Shray and Toft, who more than demonstrate the effectiveness of their respective portrayals throughout the play, reach the height of their performances at this point. Weird and bewildering charges are hurled at Stanley in a quick succession that frighteningly builds to the climax where he is reduced to mere gibberish. This scene is terrifying in its intensity, yet humorous too, as a result of the nonsensical charges issued against Stanley. The outcome is far from humorous, however, as Stanley becomes increasingly mad. The audience is pulled into the action, feeling the anger and intensity generated by Shray and Toft, and the amoral bewilderment conveyed by Lynn.

The many ambiguous and unanswered questions that the play leaves serve to hold the audience's attention to the very end. Although one may walk away feeling a bit cheated in not knowing what the climax is, I believe that such an ending would only serve as an anti-climax. This is definitely a play that can be seen again and again, for it is open to many interpretations, none of them dull.

Films

Set in the sixteenth century, The Seven Samurai centers around a group of village dwellers who decide to pay samurai for the defense of their settlement against ravaging bandits. A group of seven prominent warriors has been assembled when the attack comes, and a fantastic battle ensues. This movie later was the basis for the American film, The Magnificent Seven.

This is one of Japan's finest post-war films. Not at all to be reckoned with later martial arts flicks, it brings to the light and dark of the non-color screen a vision of an age both barbaric and civilized. The sixteenth century was a time of dramatic social upheaval in Japan: the noble but often impoverished warrior class of the samurai was gradually being made obsolete, for the need of men of arms was becoming less. Some gave up their fighting skills and became craftsmen and merchants while others concentrated with even greater zeal on their art, looking for employment under a lord and spending their spare time dueling to the death. The latter is the situation of the seven in the film, perfect followers of the chivalric warrior ideal. Perhaps a degree of wildness was felt by the makers of this movie, who lived in defeated Japan, for a return of the warrior. Besides its fascinating historical aspects, this movie is spectacular to watch, and should not be missed.— T. Klein

Mr. Smith Goes To Washington

Mr. Smith Goes to Washington. Directed by Frank Capra. Starring James Stewart and Jean Arthur. 1939. 130 minutes.

In Mr. Smith Goes to Washington, James Stewart plays one of his best roles as Jefferson Smith, a scoutmaster who is elected as a short-term senator. Mr. Smith is sent to Washington by the party boss and a senior senator who hope their innocent idealist doesn't notice the graft clause in the land-purchase bill they're introducing. Jeff Smith, at first happy to be a part of America's wonderful democracy, soon lands in all sorts of trouble. He never notices the graft clause, but he does decide to introduce his own bill for a national boys' camp—which just happens to involve the same land that the party boss wants. With the help of his secretary (Jean Arthur) and an unflinching belief in the first principles of democracy, Mr. Smith begins to fight, for all he's worth.

Mr. Smith Goes to Washington is a fun, yet sincere movie. As Frank Nugent of The New York Times declared, it's "more fun, even, than the Senate itself!"—Stephanie Klein

Neutraliy in the nuclear age

By Eric S. Kessler

Ulf Hjertonsson, deputy chief of the Swedish mission to the United States, spoke at Kenyon Monday night. Hjertonsson's lecture focused mainly upon the Swedish case of neutrality and the Swedish role in world politics.

He began his lecture with a few opening remarks concerning Olof Palme, the late Prime Minister of Sweden, and a Kenyon alum. Then he went on to speak about the role of diplomacy in the nuclear age. He concluded that the two superpowers were "condemned to diplomacy" due to the apocalyptic nature of military conflict, and that there was a role for a small, neutral country to play in nuclear age diplomacy.

Hjertonsson insisted that it was necessary for the United States and the rest of the world to understand the Swedish policy of neutrality. Neutrality was a natural outgrowth of Swedish history, according to Hjertonsson. He believed that it led to two important goals for Sweden in today's international situation: first to avoid falling under the influence of its eastern neighbors, the Soviet Union, and second, to avoid becoming the "marching outpost" of the United States. He said that it was important to make this clear to the two superpowers, especially in light of Sweden's geographic, political and strategic position.

Hjertonsson pointed to wins that made clear that neutrality did not mean that the Swedes would be defenseless, but in fact, that they have a strong military force in order to protect neutrality. He noted violations of Swedish waters by Soviet submarines as a justifying the need for having strong defenses.

Hjertonsson noted also that Swedes were very concerned with international law. He cited South Africa's policy of Apartheid, Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and United States involvement in Nicaragua as examples of violations of international law.

He stated that the Swedes held strong support for such international legal bodies as the United Nations, as forums for solving such international disputes.

Students helping students: the new Writing Center

By Amy Sutliff

Most students find themselves doing it at one time or another during their Kenyon career—asking a friend's opinion of a paper they've written, or tossing around ideas for a topic before they get down to business and pull an all-night writing session. It's also common to release tension over an upcoming assignment by discussing it, even if it's only to worry about that killer paper for which they have no real ideas, but a very real feeling of panic as the due dates approach. Consider the benefits of doing just this in an atmosphere specially designed to direct such responses toward producing a good finished paper. Consider the new writing center in 307 Olin—the seminar room on the third floor, formerly known as the Writing Center and located in the old Sunset Cottage, in the Pomeroy section of town.

The writing center has a comfortable atmosphere and the staff members are trained to help students develop essays, improve their writing skills and take advantage of the resources available to them. The center offers drop-in sessions for students who need help with a specific topic or who simply want to discuss their progress with a knowledgeable peer. The center is open from 7:30-10:00 p.m. Monday through Thursday and from 1:00-4:00 p.m. on Friday.

Kenyonites recruited from the student body are well versed in the art and science of writing. They are skilled at helping students with their work through a variety of techniques, including traditional one-on-one tutoring, peer review sessions, and small group workshops.

The writing center is open to all students, regardless of major or background. It is a resource where students can come to discuss their work and receive constructive feedback on their writing. By utilizing the writing center, students can improve their writing skills and develop a deeper understanding of the writing process. The center is staffed by trained tutors who are available to help students with a wide range of writing assignments, from essays and research papers to term papers and senior theses.

Students are encouraged to use the writing center as a regular resource, rather than relying on ad hoc strategies like asking friends for advice or pulling all-nighters. By utilizing the writing center, students can develop a habit of seeking feedback and support from peers and professionals, which can lead to greater confidence and success in their writing.

Faculty Lectureships bring music, computers and religion

The Faculty Lectureship Program will be sponsoring three presentations of importance to many academic interests next week. Quiet is a sizable vocal quintet from the Netherlands. Their repertoire consists of madrigals from the Renaissance through avant-garde pieces of today. They are widely recorded and perform throughout the world. They will present Saturday evening at 8 p.m. in Rosie Hall.

In conjunction with the establishment of the computer center in the Olin Library, Pamela McCorduck will present "Artificial Intelligence and the New Humanities" in the Biology Auditorium at 8 p.m. on November 10th. Author of The Universal Machine: Confessions of a Technological Optimist, and Machines Who Think: A Personal Inquiry into the History and Prospects of Artificial Intelligence, McCorduck's approach to the use of computers is an interdisciplinary one. Ladies take 2nd in NCAC, team qualifies for regionals

By John Welchil

The women's cross country team conducted a charity run to raise money and support last Saturday at Allegheny. The Ladies have now qualified for the regionals for the fourth straight year, as they won to finish in second place at the conference meet. The race was an overall success for many reasons, mainly because the women put together a complete race. For the second week in a row, the Ladies put on a perfect physical race. They were in prime condition, and they paced themselves well for the entire race. The mental attitude of the team was also excellent, which helped lead the team to a second place finish in the conference. The team, as a whole, combined to finish second only to Allegheny, who won the meet with 22 points. The Ladies had 65, and Wooster followed the Ladies with 80 points. Oberlin came in fourth with 91, and Denison took fifth with 118. Ohio Wesleyan did not finish the race, and Case ended up last with 142 points.

Worland qualifies for regional meet as Lords' x-country places sixth

By John Welchil

The men's cross country team travelled to Allegheny College with an outside shot at a bid for the regional championships, but the Lords will have to wait until next year. On Friday, the team went to Allegheny, and during a warm-up run, Justin Lee stepped on a rock and severely injured his ankle. Without the anchor, the Lords weren't strong enough in their top five to place high enough to reach the regionals. The top three teams in the conference go to regionals, and the conference meet decides the final standings in the NCAC. "If Justin had been there, we would have beaten Oberlin and probably placed a lot higher," says Coach Duane Gomez. Aside from the injury, the men ran very well. Paul Worland, the freshman sensation, finished 14th overall in 26:44. That time is a personal best for Worland, and more importantly, that finish qualified him for the regional meet in Holland, Michigan in two weeks. Worland is the first Kentucky runner to make the regionals. He was the only member of the team to make this year's meet. The good time for Worland is interesting for another reason in that he has a chance to win in the second mile of the race which slowed his pace early. Alex Hetherington finished 27th overall and second on the team with a time of 27:24. This race was one of Alex's best during his two years at Kenyon. For senior captain Charles Cowap, this was his last race for Kenyon, and he went out in grand style. He ran the best race of his career, covering the course in 27:46. This time was fast enough to give Cowap third on the team and 37th overall. Terry Miner also ran one of his fastest races for Kenyon, as he captured 43rd place in a time of 28:11. Scott McKissoc filled out the top five for the Lords, finishing 56th with a time of 29:26. The winning time was 25:46.

According to Gomez, "The team ran well. They just missed Justin. They came in 2nd. The Lords finished sixth out of 12 teams. The finishing order was as follows: Case 27, Wooster 54, Denison 77, A106, Oberlin 133, Kenyon 139, and 183. Comments Gomez, "The men ran as well as they could have. It was a real challenge. It was really boring." Paul Worland will run in the regionals in two weeks, but for the rest of the team, the season is over. Worland will travel to the seven regional qualifiers for Skidmore, and all eight will travel meet in two weeks.

Spikers annihilate Gators and Bishops on way to conference title

By Ann Davies

After last week's matches, the volleyball team can claim credits in the Kinsley County and in the North Coast Athletic Conference (at least for the regular season).

The Ladies pounded the Cougars from Mount Vernon Nazarene last Thursday, 15-10, 15-11, in a best-of-five series. Coach Gretchen Westreich admits that the team may have looked flat but explains, "We were working on execution. We were concerned with how we were playing, not how excited we were playing."

Regular season play in the NCAC wound up last weekend with the spikers preserving their perfect record. That's "Perfect" with a capital "P." The Ladies didn't even drop a game to an NCAC opponent this season. On Saturday, they trampled Allegheny, 15-8, 15-12, then killed (literally) Ohio Wesleyan, 15-4, 15-8.

"Our attack really looked good," Westreich comments. Against Allegheny the Ladies had a .319 kill efficiency and rallied a .935 attack against OWC. "That's the most efficiently we've attacked in a long time," says Westreich. Sophomore Holly Swank led the team with 21 kills (or the best in the conference) and a .420 kill percentage. "Twin Towers" Chris Seyfried and Kirsten Holtheimer also made significant contributions at the net. Seyfried recorded 16 kills in her "most consistent game this season," according to Westreich. Holtheiner continued to intimidate the opposition with six solo blocks and three assists.

Junior Shelley Swank returned to play this weekend after suffering a broken leg. The first match of the season. Against the tallied five kills in 10 attempts, height was key. Coach had Kenyon, "It will help our play all around."

The next week the Ladies faced some tough opponents. On Tuesday they traveled to Winona to play the host team, Malon, lately defeated, 3-0. The team, 36th. On Saturday, the team, 36th. On Saturday, the team, 36th. On Saturday, the team, 36th. On Saturday, the team, 36th.

"I think this is going to be a Spurs game," says Coach Chris Seyfried. "I think the Lady will face off at the Regional against the Owls."

Soccer ends season with a pair of wins, Barnes gets 4th shutout

By Darryl Shankle

The Kenyon Lords’ soccer team ended its 1985 campaign in fine fashion last week, winning its last two matches. Kenyon defeated Denison College last Saturday at McBride Field, 3-1. Their final records were 7-4-1 in NCAC, and 9-5-2 overall.

Last Wednesday at Mount Union, the Lords were controlled, 25-16. They fired in the shot that counted, however, in a penalty to senior. Junior Mason Morikian made a super move in the box, setting up the goal by another junior, Bryce Martin. The score came at the 39:18 mark of the second half - a very good second half," said Coach Jeff Vennell. "We were fortunate at first, but we finally got some breaks and scored a win." Junior goalie Chris Barnes captured his third shutout of the year, as he stopped 12 shots on goal. The Lords picked up their only NCAC win of the 1986 season by defeating a good Mount Union team.

The first half, the only score came at the 27:58 mark, when senior Geoff Destefero and Tom Elmer pass the ball to a teammate. Junior David Bowser combined to assist junior Bryce Martin off of an indirect kick situation.

The second half started out slowly (for Kenyon was 2-4-6 in the second half, the Gators’ Ryan Reefer intercepted an intended pass to the Lords’ goalie. Barnes. Keefer scored an unassisted goal off the bad pass to tie the game at 1-1. The Lords came right back just 9 minutes later when Destefero and sophomore Richard Ginsburg assisted sophomore Tom Elmer, who headed the ball into the net. Kenyon later added an insurance goal with 16:00 left when Elmer assisted freshman Martin Del Cid.

“I finally felt we played well from start to finish,” noted Vennell. “And winning against a good team like Allegheny, we can build a base for the 1987 season.”

The Lords were outshot, 16-10, and saves were equal at five a piece.

Kenyon’s scorers this year were Elmer (5 goals, 2 assists), Ginsburg (2 goals, 3 assists), Martin (3 goals), Del Cid (2 goals), Destefero (1 goal, 2 assists), Jeff Alspaugh (1 goal, 1 assist), Tom Gallo (1 goal, 1 assist), John Brown (3 assists), and Pat Flood (1 assist). Goalie Chris Barnes accumulated 4 shutouts, 128 saves, and surrendered 1.5 goals per game (24 in 16 games).

As for 1987, the Lords are losing just two players to graduation, seniors Pat Flood and Geoff Destefero.

Missed opportunities’ plague Lords

By Lawrence Paolucci

The Kenyon Lords’ football team lost a disappointing, 23-1, decision to the Gators of Denison College last Saturday at McBride Field. The loss was disappointing because the Lords had several chances to score, but would come up with the big play. It was a game characterized by these missed opportunities.

The loss, the Lords’ record slipped to 3-5 overall and 2-4 in the NCAC.

The game itself started favorably for the Lords, as they took the opening kickoff 61 yards for a field goal, making the score, 3-0, Kenyon 10:26 remaining in the first half. The game remained this way until Allegheny orchestrated a fifteen play, eighty-three yard drive for a touchdown, making the score, 3-7. Gators 5:46 left in the first half. This is when the Lords began to be plagued by missed opportunities. Just before the half a fourth and goal play from the Allegheny four yard line, rather than going for a field goal and taking the touchdown. The play fooled no one, including the Gators. The Lords came away with a fourth down, and still trailed, 7-3, at the half.

The second half brought no relief for the team, for on their initial possession of the ball, they had their drive halted when Kenyon quarterback Eric Dahlquist had a pass knocked off in the end zone. This interception seemed after Kenyon had apparently moved a few plays earlier, but had the redzone called back on a questionable holding penalty at the Allegheny 16-yard line.

These missed opportunities continued ominously for the Lords, as on their next possession, Allen Koths’ 44-yard field goal attempt fell just short. The defense kept the Lords in the game through three quarters, for despite these mistakes, they still only trailed, 7-3, at the end of the third quarter. Then the roof caved in on the Lords. A weak defense was finally overrun by an impressive Gator running attack. This attack was led by the Gators’ sparkling tailback, Curtis Brown.

He rushed 20 times for 128 yards and two fourth quarter touchdowns that spelled the end of the Lords’ comeback hopes.

Despite the loss, some Lords deserve recognition for their individual efforts. Obviously, the Lords were led by the consistent efforts of offensive lineman Brian Conkie. These efforts earned him offensive player of the game. Additionally, quarterback Eric Dahlquist and receiver Mark Longharr had fine games. Dahlquist was 15 for 34 for 162 yards, while Longharr made five receptions for 73 yards before getting injured. He will miss the rest of the season.

Defensively, the Lords were led by lineman Arthur Miller. He made nine tackles, received a 95% efficiency rating, and a 97% effort rating for the game from the coaching staff. For these efforts, he also received the defensive player of the game honors. Additionally, linebackers Tim Rogers and Pete Murphy deserve special mention. Rogers was in on 13 tackles, while Murphy was associated with 20 tackles.

The Lords will try to bounce back this weekend, as they face a tough Centre College team in Danville, Kentucky at 1:30 on Saturday. The Colonels are nationally ranked, and have a chance at the Division III playoffs. The Lords will hopefully be able to play the role of spoiler.

The Lords and Ladies of the Week

Cross Country

Men’s:

Senior captain, Charles Cowap saves the honors for this week. He ran the best race of his career at the conference meet with a time of 27:46.

Women:

The entire women’s team garners the award this week. They ran superb races, finished second in the conference as a team, and qualified for the fourth time for the regional meet.

Football

Offense:

Brian Conkie, junior offensive linemane, did an excellent job of blocking the Allegheny defense in the Lords’ loss to the Gators last Saturday.

Defense:

Art Miller had 9 tackles (one of which was for a loss of yards), a 95% efficiency rating, and a 97% effort rating in the Allegheny game.

Men’s Soccer

Offense:

Tom Elmer scored a goal and assisted on a goal in the game against Allegheny.

Defense:

Bryce Martin scored a goal and anchored the defense in the Lords’ victory over Allegheny.

Volleyball

Chris Seyfried had a .400 kill percentage in the game against Allegheny and Ohio Northern last weekend. She played extremely well at the net, and had one of her most consistent performances.

about the plans. He wonders whether Kenyon currently has the educational resources to train students to produce professional quality programming. He also expresses "a long-term concern" regarding financing. Specifically, he questions whether a station in existence for a few years would present to the Finance Committee requests for extensive capital improvements.

Keefe is certain of one thing at least: student interest. He cites an overwhelming demand for positions in broadcast media at WKCO, where he figures 182 students are interested and more who desire to be.

The programs on the potential KCTV would focus around news and possibly a game show. Keefe visualizes a news program with emphasis on sports, campus and community news, interviews, editorials and movie reviews for KFS. The program schedule would be run on a loop system allowing rebroadcast of all shows at intervals throughout the day.

The Board of Trustees was presented with the television concept and "everyone gave it its blessing," reports Joan Portman, Chair of the Board's Student Affairs Committee. She emphasizes television's increasing importance in today's society, and adds that a Kenyon TV station would be "a very good tool for admissions."

The possibility of KCTV is an exciting one, but many decisions and variables must be settled before a station comes into existence. Keefe concludes, "We must attack each problem in order to complete the task at hand."

"It would be nice if the logistics and money could be worked out," Matters concedes.

Grace period review

Student Council for approval. From there the plan will go to the Academic Policy Committee.

One council member definitely dissatisfied with the new policy is Dave Paradise, member of Council's ad hoc grace period committee. He believes that the current form of the grace period is just a way of officially legitimizing a rule never intended to be enforced from the start. Paradise explains this by stating that not one official enforcement of the rule has ever occurred to his knowledge.

Joan Slonczewski, Chair of the Academic Policy Committee, also states that not one official petition has ever been filed; though she admits there have been several conflicts concerning grace period, they were all solved before an official petition was ever filed.

According to Slonczewski, there are two major problems that prevent the current grace period from working adequately. One of them is the misconception and ignorance of the Kenyon student body concerning the actual mechanics and definitions of the grace period. She believes some Kenyon students view grace period as a week long reading period, which it is not. The other problem is the straightforward violation of the rules by the professors who assign a large quantity of work during grace period without prior notice. The solution to these complaints, she feels, can be gained through communication between the faculty and students, and perhaps some enforcement of the rules. She stresses, however, that it is the responsibility of the student to file a complaint with the Academic Policy Committee if he/she feels he/she has been violated.

Paradise offers a different criticism of the current policy. He believes that the previous policy should have never been changed in the first place. Paradise argues that the Academic Policy Committee avoided solving the problems of the old grace period by adding a clause that would allow teachers to give assignments. This, he explains, defies entire purpose of grace period which was to make students have adequate time, free from ordinary pressures, to prepare for final examinations.

As the issue stands now, the current grace period may stand for three years in its present state. If the substitute proposal advanced by the Student Council is accepted by the Academic Policy Committee, then the procedures concerned with the grace period may still be changed. The final decision though, Matters puts, "entirely up to the faculty."
