Committee favors Kenyon Chaplaincy

The Committee, consisting of seven members of the faculty, the administration and a student, has been working in the past six months to develop the need for a chaplaincy at Kenyon. The committee has been formed to act on an instruction from President vacancy.

a. Should Kenyon have a chaplain or is the college concerned with student religious life?

b. If so, what should the duties and responsibilities of the position be?

c. If no, what qualifications should the College seek in candidates for the position?

Public discussions and interviews were intended to provide the committee with information concerning the religious life at Kenyon. Also, the statistical information gathered by Dean Atkins over the summer of 1984 was used as the basis to make contact with religious officials at all other colleges (Anchon, Bates, Bowdoin, Carleton, Denison, DePauw, Dickinson, Gammell, Kenyon, Kalamazoo, and Williams) to gather information to serve on the committee.

Food Service thanks all who pitched in

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to sincerely THANK and compliment the students at Kenyon for understanding and complying with the dining service during our recent winter storm. We met great difficulties with our employees being stranded at home. Needless to say, many were concerned about the meals for the students and did attempt to drive to campus but got stranded on the way. Thanks to you all, THE STAFF was able to serve the Delta for a fine breakfast at 7:30 and the Beta for helping out at Gould along with all the valuable volunteer students who pitched in to help us out.

Sincerely,

Student refutes Journal's stance on indoctrination question

To the Editor:

In the February 3rd edition of the Gambier Journal, the "What We Think" column respected the case of education vs. indoctrination. As the proponent, the Journal accused the Kenyon Administration of... an organized effort... to pitch one point of view at the expense of an open discussion of all viewpoints.

This point of view, according to the Journal, is feminism, as embodied in the Women's Center and the Women's Studies. I would like to take this opportunity to defend Kenyon by refuting the accusations made in the aforementioned article.

First of all, the Journal's points is not a major defense of the Women's Center and Women's Studies. They state that if there is a whole slate of ideas out there that we hear little of, then the notion money that enables us to attend Kenyon College would be better spent elsewhere. This is of course true. The object of liberal arts education is to expose us to as many ideas and views as possible, that we may learn to analyze our world from as many perspectives as possible. The Women's Center and Women's Studies center for just that purpose...to make all more aware of women's perspectives on the world.

This discussion on feminism is only for women. Nor does it mean that no other female students are being educated. It is merely a way of looking at the world through a focus on females. All studies do this. Philosophy classes analyze the world in terms of philosophical questions and debate. Political science looks at the world as a series of political transactions and affairs. Every field has a specific focus...not the exclusion of other factors, rather to add another perspective to the way we view our world.

Another change made by the Journal is that Kenyon--administrators (I'm attempting to devise a 'New Card'... based on a certain 'progressive' viewpoint." This sidesteps the truth, needing just a slight shuffle of words. What is being discussed is a "progressive" card that some administrators always would be discussed. That is, it seems that the administration is trying to shape the human body without studying current medical technology and discovery. Although it was a genius, to progress no further than his discoveries would today's medical students absolutely ignorant of how to deal with polio. A college curriculum should be continuously expanded to make it relevant to the problems and issues that the students will face in the "real world.

The "What We Think" column then takes James Baldwin's lecture as an illustration of how to show varied points of view. Mr. Baldwin, they claim, failed to..."discussion of in reality...to the conversational" way may, he seems that this was his work...his work...Mr. Baldwin, apparently overlooked only to speak of his personal experience of living as a black man in a white-dominated world. If the editors of the Journal wished for him to discuss specific "innovative proposals" they should have brought the subject to Mr. Baldwin's attention. That is in fact a good allegory to what happens on this campus. If it is true that all ideas are not being represented here, that may be because they have not been brought to the community's attention by students. It is not the Administration's responsibility to form political groups for students to join. Rather, their responsibilities lie in creating a social, political, and financial climate in which all groups may receive public recognition. It is then up to the students to take advantage of that climate, and do this, not through fear, but with the encouragement of those who feel that the Journal's charges...in the Administration are accurate or not, but the attitudes rather than education...are founded. Indeed, I wonder if the members of "What We Think" really think this.

Sincerely,
Paul B. Singer '88

Security should consider situation

To the Editor:

I was concerned during the women's conference last night. During the last five minutes of the highly newsy broadcast, not one but a dozen watchers were informed by a security officer that "this place is closing in five minutes." True to word was at 6:30 p.m., the officer stepped in front of the audience when it was about to approach the meeting. Asked if she could not remain one or two minutes until the end of the meeting, she replied, "I have to clean up time" and did, indeed, "run off the set.

I understand that this past week has been a trying one for our security staff, in light of the recent tragedies. However, then, with just a little bit of effort, this officer could have provided an explanation to those present as to the purpose other than to create a friction between students and staff.

I simply ask that the security staff consider the situation along with the officers, who are just as hard to do so. Undoubtedly (necessarily) there will be more friction, the exercise of authority, and the rules do order keep. But it is the exception that makes the rule. I appreciate all the "safety" programs that create respect.

Sincerely,
J. Scott Ford '87
Weathermen leader was a product of Kenyon

By Rik Kleinfeld

When one thinks about Kenyon College, it’s an institution whose impact is mostly limited to a small New England town. The college’s campus is surrounded by hills and woods, and its students are known for their intellectual rigor and social activism. Kenyon is not a school known for producing Weathermen leaders, but one man from the class of 1968 was an exception to that rule.

Larry Robbins, a 1968 graduate of Kenyon College, was a prominent member of the Weathermen, a radical political group that emerged as a response to the Vietnam War and the civil rights movement. Robbins was one of the original members of the Weathermen, and he served as the group’s chairman for several years. He was arrested multiple times in connection with criminal activity, and he was eventually indicted for his role in the Weathermen’s activities.

Robbins was born in 1943 in New York City. He was the son of Jewish immigrants, and he grew up in a working-class neighborhood. Robbins was drawn to politics at a young age, and he became involved in the anti-Vietnam War movement while he was a student at Kenyon College.

Robbins was a member of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, which was formed in the 1960s to support the civil rights movement. He was also a member of the Students for a Democratic Society, which was a radical group that advocated for political change through direct action.

Robbins was attracted to the Weathermen because he believed in the group’s radical perspective on the war. He joined the Weathermen in 1968 and became one of the group’s most prominent members. Robbins was involved in several high-profile incidents, including the 1969 bombing of the Pentagon Papers.

Robbins was a complex and controversial figure. He was a brilliant and erudite scholar, but he was also a violent and erratic activist. Robbins was eventually indicted for his role in the Weathermen’s activities, and he was eventually sentenced to 50 years in prison.

Robbins’s story is a testament to the power of radical politics to attract and organize people. Robbins was a deeply committed activist, and he was willing to do whatever it took to bring about social change. His legacy is a reminder of the importance of political activism, even if it means taking risks and facing consequences.

In the end, Robbins’s life was cut short by a tragic accident. He died in a car crash in 1984, and he was buried in a mass grave with other Weathermen members. His legacy lives on in the memories of those who knew him, and in the ongoing debate about the role of political violence in social movements.

Spring triathlon planned

By Mervyn Erosz

Entry forms will be distributed this week for the annual Spring Triathlon, which will be held on Sunday, April 21. The triathlon course will include an 800-meter (1,500-yard) swim, a 10,000-meter (6.2-mile) cycling, a dance, and a 3,000-meter (1.8-mile) run. The idea of sponsoring a triathlon at Kenyon was the brainchild of junior Tom Freilich, who was inspired by the success of the triathlons organized by Coach Jim Sisson for his swim team. Freilich is organizing the triathlon as a way to promote the physical education of the triathlon, which has stood the test of time. The triathlon will be held in honor of the Kenyon triathletes and to raise awareness for the importance of healthy living.

February in Gaither typically leaves students and faculty begging for relief. Cabin fever is rampant among the students, shoes, turkey and Lucky charms don't seem to do much. This year, as always, IM basketball is providing the most popular and entertaining sport of the February Blues. In addition, many more skilled and talented women's teams invaded Erie for the first time ever two weeks ago and many of the players of the ladies have since stormed the field. Two more teams have been added to the schedule and Saturday afternoons are now filled with the sound of rafter lady hoopsters shooing down the court.

In the last regular season game the Lords travelled to OWU where they took it to the wire but again came up short. 81-70 (61-51) is a very talented team with five starters, two of them are top ten scorers on their front line. Coach Brown said of this game, “They are a very talented team and they are tough on offense.” Chris Reussl and Mark Spier led the way for the Lords scoring 22 and 21 points respectively. Kenyon shot 53% from the field and 64% from the line. OWU hit only slightly better 57% from the field and 60% from the line.
Ohio Wesleyan out rebounded Kenyon 34-21 but fouled the much taller 6 footers as compared to OWU’s 5’11”. The Eagles made 15 assists while OWU only had 5. Agresto speaks critically of Liberal Arts
When the laughter dies down, Agresto gets more serious. The point, he says, is not that we should be reading a book, it does something to you.
“Thus, I tend to kill Liberal Arts when we decide whether it’s worth two books that are ‘good.”

The second enemy of Liberal Arts education is the so-called knowledge of the NEH, the “idealization of studies.” That is, “All the ‘isms and ‘ologies through which we filter knowledge are... generally disturbing.” If our goal is to educate a society whose intellectual roots will be passages in the Bible and the 23rd Psalm, I fear, the NEH’s “legitimacy” of Western thought will be lost.

Herne’s NEH attempts to “Reclaim A Leg” to assist particular groups in their study We are not interested in a ‘maze of ideas’ Am I learning from great books, ever, anyone, or only about them?”

The line of these questions is one that has been handled about culture quite a bit lately, especially in reference to a few specific courses. Agresto says, “I am just trying to enlighten or persuade students, and I am not trying to study. As I was trying to enlighten or persuade students, and I am not trying to study. As I am trying to enlighten or persuade others. I am not trying to study.”

Gary Brooks’ jump shot and Chuck Griffe’s “get out my house” defense, have won a few games but still lack the overall coherence needed to challenge Williams. As for the rest of the roster, Brad Bold has helped the 3-Jims inside game but they are still in desperate need of a good point guard and a good outside threat. The Delt Machine, probably this year’s greatest asset, has been disappointing. As for Rebs, this is the last year he has a chance to be a great guard every year to find more and more elusive ways to lose, but it seems to be a losing battle, and a good season to give the front three the best opportunity to shine.

Jane Harris, the only woman, has been an unexpected surprise, scoring in every game throughout the season and finding more and more ways to lose, but it seems to be a losing battle, and a good season to give the front three the best opportunity to shine.
