THE KENYON GLEE CLUB

LIMA ASSOCIATION OF ALUMNI FORMED

Another Ohio Alumni Association Came Into Existence on First Day of Year

Dr. James M. Greensdale, '76, A. M., '84, is President--Many Alumni and Students Present

Another Kenyon Alumni Association was launched at Lima, Ohio, January 1, New Year's night, with sixteen sons of the college present at the "first annual" dinner, held at the Lima Club. In addition to the alumni and six sons now on the Hill, six High School seniors were entertained with turkey and songs, the purpose being their conversion toward the class of Kenyon, 20.

Dr. James M. Greensdale, '76, heads the organization, with O. W. Freeman, ex-'13, as vice-president, David W. Bowman, '14, as secretary and publicity man, with Wal- lid H. King, ex-'15, acting as treasurer. Walter S. Jackson

GLEE CLUB IS UP TO FORMER YEARS

Home Concert to Be Given February 1, During Senior Prom Week--Plan for Big Tour

Kenyon's Glee Club, revived after a long period of inactivity, and with three successful concerts already to its credit, bids fair to make the greatest success in its history.

To date concerts have been given in Mt. Vernon, Akron, and Cleveland; a home concert is scheduled for Senior Prom week, and an extended trip through the state is planned for the Easter vacation.

Favorable press comment has been made in every town visited. Akron hailed the club as the best ever heard there. The Cleveland concert was given on December 18 at the Hotel Statler. Numerous Kenyon alumni were present, and the affair was an entire artistic success. The singers, experienced from their previous concerts, were at their best, and gave a re-

ELABORATE PLANS FOR SENIOR PROM

February 1 and 2 are Dates Set for Big Social Event of Year Given By Seniors

Owing to changes in the college calendar for the year, the Senior Prom will come in the middle of the week instead of over a week-end as formerly. Festivities begin on Tuesday, February 1 and will last for the usual two days.

The Seniors have arranged for two evenings of pleasure, Tuesday and Wednesday, February 1 and 2.

Tuesday evening will find entertainment provided by the Glee Club, which has three successful concerts to its credit and is determined to add another, and by an informal dance following the concert and continuing until mid-night. A unique feature will be the number of violin selections interspersed between dances and given by an Oberlin man, by some reputed to be equal in power to many professionals. The prices will be the same as for previous proms.

NEW YORK ALUMNI GATHER AT BANQUET

Large Number Attend Annual Affair Kenyon Spirit Is Dominant--Enthusiasm High

President Peirce is Present and Relates Conditions on Hill--Talks of Future

New York, Jan. 6.--The annual banquet of the members of the Kenyon Alumni association of the East was held at Delmonicos on the evening of January 3 with a large representation of the body in attendance. With the customary enthusiasm and spirit which pervades all such gatherings, the event will go down in Kenyon's history as one of the most successful and pleasant that has ever been held. Men from classes as early as 1883 and as recent as 1915 were present and the general good feeling that was evidenced proved that time and weather serve to increase rather than diminish the love for Ken-
TWO PROFESSORS HONORED

At the meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, held recently in Columbus, Dr. Walton was elected to the General Council of the Association.

1. Allis was elected chairman of the Ohio Section of the new Mathematics Society, which the above association formed at its Columbus meeting. The new society has been called the Mathematics Association of America.

The election of both professors is not only an honor to them but also to Kenyon College.

'93, will preside at a toastmaster at all gatherings of the Lima association and Chester M. Cable, ex-11, a former football captain, will keep order as sergeant-at-arms.

On the executive committee are the president and the secretary, with John L. Cable, '06, Emmett J. Jackson, ex-99, and F. E. Thompson, '15.

The dinner was started as an informal gathering, and the younger alumni decided to hold the event during the Christmas holidays for the benefit of the students. The latter were later pressed into service as waiters, and six likely seniors of L. E. S. all headed for O. S. U., were served from that ignoble fate by an invitation to the Kenyon dinner.

When the fowl had been tucked away in pleasing quantities and everyone sated with vegetables, John Cable started the works by introducing Walter Jackson as temporary chairman. The latter assumed charge while a set of officers was selected, calling for suitable speeches from all. As there were not enough jobs to go around the executive committee was fixed at the above number in order to suit all who attended and reprove the few who did not.

The men now on the Hill, six in number, reported on conditions at Gambier, and each of the guests was asked to unfold a few impressions. All told the same story: "I was thinking of going to O. S. U., but now I don't know."

After the alumni, enthusiastic over their first dinner and the formation of a permanent organization, finished talking to the half dozen guests, that latter knew why they had been invited. The talk was not of a conventional style, either, as censors would have had a hard job toning down the remarks addressed toward certain alleged institutions of learning about Ohio. The singing, however, was a clinching argument with youngsters who had never heard of Stanton and didn't know what a Rhodes scholarship was. Where

Shortly before 8 o'clock many of the loyal sons of the college on the hill had assembled at the appointed place to eat of the good things prepared under the direction of the committee and to hear the news of the college as well as reminiscences of some of its early happenings. Before introducing the president, the house master, Earl D. Babat, ‘93, sketched the beginnings of the college for the benefit of reporters of the “Sun” and “Herald.” He then introduced the first speaker, President Peirce, whose address was preceded by a long and effective “Haila.”

Dr. Peirce outlined in his forceful way the great strides that Kenyon has made in the past few years and pointed to the remarkably healthy condition of the college today with its increased enrollment and widening sphere of usefulness. He further mentioned the representative character of the men in college, stating that as usual many places outside Ohio contained alumni who were doing their share to send men to college and thus support the institution. The results of the past season in athletics were reported and the prospects for the coming year were met with great applause. The generally successful growth in all phases of college life served to accentuate the already fervent zeal for Kenyon on the part of all the alumni present. The president’s speech was received with great enthusiasm and applause.

The second speaker, A. D. Rockwell, ‘03, told in a reminiscent way of the days of ex-President Hayes, ‘42, and recalled many anecdotes of the loyal son of Kenyon who served his country so well.

The Hon. James L. Wells, ’84, Treasurer of New York state and known as “Father of the Deens,” was next introduced. He told in a very interesting way of Kenyon life under Levis Andrews and the condition of things at college at the outbreak of the Civil War. The different views held by the students tended to much discussion among all the people in Gambier as well as everywhere else. The responses made by the student body was graphically told and incidents of the war proved the moral as they trained the young men who had left Kenyon.

Describing a somewhat different period and employing a lighter vein, the Rev. E. M. McCrory, ’94, told of the college in his day and recounted many of the interesting stories about Professor Benton.

The fifth speaker, R. F. Lyth, ’8, spoke on “Preparateness.” Just as Kenyon men had been in the forefront in the dark years of the ’60’s, in like manner, the speaker asserted, the Kenyon men today would be willing, should the occasion demand it, to sacrifice their property and their lives for the sake of America. His brief and forceful speeches was well received.

The Rev. C. E. Walkley, ’92, in a short but emphatic way urged the alumni to support in every way possible the Kenyon of today and pointed out the necessity of keeping in touch with the college to accomplish this end.

Grove D. Curtis, ’80, made an interesting speech referring to the work of the literary societies in college and their importance as a part of college life.

A. D. Rockwell, ex-’93, asked to respond to a speech entertained by the listeners by a short anecdote known as “The Darkey, the Donkey, and the Telephone.” Heartily laughter and plenty of applause followed his clever story.

Other men who responded to toasts were: the Hon. Van Vechten O’Brett, ‘05, and Hon. J. B. Lea-

Good Work

We may well congratulate the College authorities on the steps they have recently taken for better fire protection. "Safety first" is an excellent maxim in this matter and the College cannot afford to neglect facilities for its own protection. The Harcourt fire of two years ago instigated the editor of this paper at that time to urge the College officials to action. He pointed out the numerous and serious fires the College has experienced. And it would seem that fortune especially favored us that the many smaller fires taking place did not result in more serious, when we consider that there was an almost entire lack of protection. The installation of fire apparatus and now more closely decreases the chance of any serious results from fire, and we may rest peacefully knowing that everything possible has been done for the best protection against fire.

Constitution Amendment

At the next meeting of the Kenyon Assembly, action will be taken upon a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the Assembly, which would make the effect that censure be passed upon men violating the rules of the Dormitory Committee, by the Dormitory Committee alone, without the necessity of its being voted upon by the Assembly itself.

The point arose from the failure of the Assembly to censure men who, in the judgment of the Committee, deserved a vote of censure. Though the vote of censure was passed later, the members of the Dormitory Committee feel that the matter of censure should be left in their hands.

However, in a college of this size, under student government, it seems hardly wise to take such a step, for it would only tend to make service on the Dormitory Committee more unpleasant. Censure by the student body as a whole is felt more than such censure by a committee. It is certainly up to the men in college who enjoy student government, to at least make the return of standing back of their committee in the punishment of offenders against the dormitory rules.

Glee Club an Example

The successful revival of the Kenyon Glee club is a great credit to the college and to the men who have brought it about; but there is more than credit to be gained from the success of the Glee Club. There is a practical lesson and example to the student body.

In the past the Glee club was in active because some of the men in charge did not do their duty. If a leader is active, the manage failed to secure dates; and if the manager worked the leader did not. Naturally, the men lost interest and the club suffered.

Things were changed last fall and the results of the present season have demonstrated what real application and hard work can do. This will be well applied to other students at the College. There have been too many student officers who, considering their position as "honors," have done nothing to justify their holding them. Kenyon should no longer have positions for students who will not fulfill their duties. The Glee club hit the point of the last, let others follow.

The Path Again

Some time ago an editorial appeared in the Collegian in regard to the condition of the Middle Path. It was written very few days later that workmen were seen, diligently spreading gravel over that portion of the path from Bexley to Harcourt. This publication does not wish to gainsay the credit for anything that it has not deserved but if this work was inspired through its columns, it wishes to urge a speedy continuance for the work. The path has been turned, and the greater part of the path remains in a deplorable condition.

The Middle Path is a beautiful example of the natural beauty which surrounds Gambier. It has inspired songs, poems and lyrics. To permit it to become little more than a mud road, we think, is gross neglect. We would earnestly urge the authorities to make use of the numerous gravel pits which surround our beautiful village and restore this fallen treasure to its former beauty.

Pay Up

Kenyon student government cannot exist without a Kenyon Assembly. At present there are about forty men in college who have failed to pay their athletic fees. In other words there are men who are no longer members of the Assembly and who have no right to vote.

On the very face of it, this is a rather precarious condition. The most efficient officers elected in the Assembly and the student government is done through the Assembly. With but about half of the student body members of this organization the question arises whether the Assembly can perform its work. Technically speaking no man who is not a member of the Assembly has any right to a place on the athletic teams, the glee club or any other branch of the Assembly.

Let us urge upon every man who has neglected this fee to pay it immediately. We first hear of Kenyon through its student government. Let us not lose this distinction.

Four Year Rule

By: B. Almany

With the possible abolition of baseball by the Western Conference and the Big Four in the East, the smaller colleges will soon fall in line and football will become the major sport. From a general perspective, this outcome is full of significance, when we stop to consider the achievements of the small college in football during the past few seasons, and the possibilities of the future via the passing game.

In this connection, there is no gaining the fact, that the winning teams are receiving large guarantees for their services and a guarantee is the best way to start the press. A team must be a winner or they will flounder financially besides the usual demoralization that is so characteristic of a defeated team. The secret team can afford the best coaches, and officials, besides, the manager need not hesitate to furnish the best equipment, being amply assisted by the team's ability to fill the parks at its games. Also the preparatory school, athletic scholarships at the shrine of Victory. The effect of the successful team on the enrollment is obvious.

The Kenyon Collegian recently published an article concerning "Moral Victories." There was a reason, what needs no explanation to Kenyon men, Kenyon is playing Conference football. Is the one you residence rule really beneficial or detrimental to Kenyon? Does the team fare well enough to make it? Is Gambier? Are the guarantee satisfactory abroad? We all know the answers.

Coast Yacht of Michigan commenting on the unusual showing of the small colleges in a recent article for the press, attributed their success in a large measure, to lower entrance requirements than are found at the larger institutions.

If these are the real conditions, then Kenyon faces just one problem which should be treated fairly, first of all, by setting aside false pride. This problem is the one-year residence rule, which is not observed by such institutions as Brown, Allegheny, West Virginia University, Notre Dame, Ohio State, Pittsburgh and other representative teams. The University of Pittsburgh, admitted one of the highest ranking teams in the country plays four-year men in all its classes besides the freshman, the W. & J-Pitt game this year drew 30,000 spectators to
A Wine Room of the North

By M. G. NICOLA. '94

Still silent he led the way up the grass-grown path, up the broad steps into the house, and then a long dark corridor. Suddenly he opened a door and I beheld—my hand trembles, a mist comes into my eye, I break out into a cold sweat! Oh! God, how can I tell what I feel now?

"A thing, one of three others, ran and dropped at my feet. Be told thy future wife?" Jean screamed.

"It was indeed my former love. Her hands were rotted away; her feet, but the brownish-black of decaying flesh and bone.

"Fuchsin! Undine," she screamed, but was interrupted by familiar laughter; and, as I glanced up, Jean's face, lit with a wicked gleam, and his eyes filled with the essence of hell.

"I knew beside my love as she gased.

"It was Jean. I was steadfast in my love for you. He would not have said so. Her voice grew fainter and fainter. "He is master here. He became enraged. At last, seeing he gained nothing by argument, his jealous mind conceived the plan of confining us with a leper. The others are deaf, but I—She tried to mutter, numberless words of lifeless.

"A shrill cry rent the heavy air. 'Your birthday present,' cried Jean, and, as I looked up, he plunged a knife deep into his breast, and warm blood gushed over the floor as he fell.

"The wind moaned and moaned through the trees as I staggered from the fast-smelling room.

For a long time after his recital my friend of this Russian night at looking vacantly into space; then, with a moon of anguish he leaned over the table and buried his face in his arms.

The Foreigner's face was as pale as death, and he began to use morbid, certains words that seemed to be an argument with himself, whether he should talk and tell all, or not. Finally he explained in a clear tone:

"You are both men of the world. You both have had your troubles. After tonight I will never see you again. You will never regret that I am going to tell you, which is the cause of my being here tonight."

The orchestra suddenly finished their last selection, and all was quiet, but the guttural tones and the clinking of glasses of those who still remained, the drunkards who had not yet had their fill, in a corner the Foreigner continued.

"Being in Paris on business for my government, and having disposed of that business, I felt free to walk down into the slum district. The Centro Stalt of Vienna, the Rue de la Paix of Paris, the Noviky Prospect of St. Petersburg, or the Broadway of New York never interested me, but the slums of a city, where you see life in its nakedness, beauty of feature without splendor of roguishness of feature, arched by poverty and sin—this always has been fascinating.

I hurriedly strolled through Montmartre, when suddenly I heard a scream that ended in a low pathetic moan. Location the note, I rushed into an old tenement, up several flights of stairs, and to the room where the moan came from. I opened the door. Before me stood a lady whom I had often gazed on with admiration,—a one gifted Prima Donna, who without an apparent reason had quit the stage. She was hysterically crying and wringing her hands, instilled a physician who pronounced her quite mad, and ordered her to be taken to some institution for insane."

"Meanwhile I grasped this letter from her hands, and this note."

He had a completed letter on the table, apparently written in red ink. A brief note lay on top of the letter, reading as follows:

April 24, 1897, Prison La Bel.

Dear Madame—

This letter was found clenched in the hands of prisoner 7782. It had been written in blood from his own body, by a quill he had managed to wrangle into his cell. Thanking you for the money you advanced for this letter, I remain,

Your very humble servant,

HENRI BABIN, Jailer.

Being somewhat puzzled I laid down the note and picked up the letter and began to read. And the Foreigner slowly scanned my features as I read:

"Prison La Bel, 1897.

Cheery—

As I lie in my cell, under the dark rushing river, the music and

Bexleyites

By L. H.

Bexleyites are students at Bexley, colloquially speaking, more generally and less specifically, the theological students. They are drop-out thinkers, not for their faith, but for their breadth and range of intellect. Stern and grin-visaged, the small boys of the village side off to one side when a Bexleyite approaches with measured step and forbidding look.

Asceticism is their crowning characteristic. They look upon smoking with active horror, and many a Kenyon man can ruefully testify to the pipe or cigarette which has been ruthlessly plucked from his contented lips by a rigorous Bexleyite.

Not only do they eschew the fragrant weed, these ascetics, but frivolities of every kind are tabooed. Dancing is the Devil's pastime, and the minds of these sterile, pale, and young men, and they would as soon make a call upon a young lady of Harcourt as they would listen to any but sacred music.

Whistling is another sin which some of this hole oars over my body, for I am now too weak to move. Yes, and when this letter reaches you, my flesh will be as much fought over by boot of the river rats or lying in the hot belly of a vicious snake, which inhabits these cells. I think of you, of whom I love, of you who did not love me, but adored another. And when that other man, whom you loved, killed your father, you and he were that it I who had killed him.

Last night when all was still and I was alone, with nothing but the lizards on my body, I dreamed of you. I dreamed you were in my arms, your hot lips were pressed to mine. I crushed you to me then Diable a terrible scream awoke me. I had in my arms the horrible hug who lives in this cell with me. She is dying and was trying to escape from the dreadful snake. This snake never strikes until he hears the 'klick, klick' of the death rattle in the dying man's throat, and then he coil's his glossy body around him till he dies. Then he eats. The lips I was kissing were here, decayed with disease.

"You shudder! You wring your pretty hands! You do not know that across from me lies that snake, his greenish-black, sparkling eyes fixed on me. Waiting, waiting for that 'klick' of death; and that when he tears it, I shall die wrapped in his slimy length.

Do you remember the days when we sang together in the choir—that night you kissed me and vowed you loved me? Do you remember the quaint old church in the little village?

I shall not die a Christian! Hell is heaven to this. Why do I want to see heaven when I can see your lover burn in hell? See his squirm and squirm and squirm! Bah! Goes the 'klick.'

The snake is creeping nearer, nearer.

Silently I laid the paper back on the table, and looked across at the foreigner, who was gazing into space.

I ordered more wine, filled all three glasses and raised my glass to give a toast, but a thought suddenly struck me and I asked, "How does that account for your being in Russia tonight?"

He coolly smiled, and answered, "I am the man who killed her father. She was my sweetheart.

My glass fell to the floor and burst into a thousand pieces. I staggered from the table and dizzily found my way to the door, for the wine had gone to my head.

Outside the night had cleared and the stars bravely shone. As I glanced up the white veined streets for a glimpse of the beauty suddenly burst forth in their sweet Christmas message, "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Students at the University of Wisconsin drink 141,500 mated milks per year and smoke 1,040,000 cigarettes. The bill for the two luxuries amounts to $21,920 annually.
ALFRED NOYES LECTURES

Mr. Alfred Noyes, the distinguished English post-delivered in Philo Hall on January 31st, the third of the series of Larwill lectures, given each year.

The well-known poet charmed his audience in a way that few speakers are able to do. The lecture was composed entirely of a number of Mr. Noyes’ own poems with various criticisms and explanations. The poet did not resort to the dramatic method of many orators in reading poetry but his lines were spoken in the free easy manner in which they occurred to him. Before each poem, was a complete explanation, including the origin and the inspiration which induced him to write the work.

The poet’s versatility was shown by the large fields which he covered. However all of his readings were full of that optimism and joyfulness by which he is so well known. It is this same optimism which makes his war poems so masterly and comprehensive.

The Larwill lecture committee has been extremely fortunate this year in their selection of speakers. Mr. Noyes’ lecture marked the appearance of the third eminent and well-known writer to Gambier. With the coming of each speaker the interest and attendance has increased and the lectures are hailed with enthusiasm.

markedly smooth rendition of their program.

Credit for the good showing of the club this year is due principally to four men: J. P. DeWolf, ’17, the leader of the Glee Club; J. H. Stevens, ’17, leader of the mandolin quartet; W. J. White, ’17, manager of the musical clubs, and Clarence Platt, ’17, assistant manager. Chosen because of experience and ability in musical matters, Mr. DeWolf has gathered a remarkably capable and well-trained chorus, which not only sings but interprets as well. Mr. Stevens has delighted audiences with his finished performances on the mandolin, and Mr. White has been more than usually successful in securing pupils for the club.

FINANCIAL SITUATION

Financially the season has been as great a success as musically. Although the Assembly feared that the Glee Club would be a losing proposition, substantial profits have been received at every concert.

Forbes Field. The unparalleled attendance at this game can be traced directly to the early season records of the two teams. The fact that Brown played four-year men did not detract from her victory over Yale a few years ago, nor did it prevent her quarterback from making the All-American team chosen by Walter Camp.

Kenyon will never ask any concessions from the Conference, nor is it necessary for her to break with the Conference. The matter can be handled tactfully and in a business-like way. Kenyon playing four-year men, with her high scholarship requirements and small enrollment, would be considered a worthy opponent for any team in or out of the Conference, provided she was successful on the gridiron, which is a foregone conclusion, judging from her past history. Did Kenyon’s last schedule represent the caliber of the teams we would like to play? The other members of the Conference have constructed their schedule am inously. Oberlin plays Cornell. Reserve plays the Navy. Case plays Michigan annually and even Mt. Union has sold forth against the big team at Ann Arbor in recent years. W. and J. with a team not the equal of our 1906 team humbled Yale and Lafayette this year. Kenyon has the four-year rule open to her if she wishes to choose it, and the question is worthy of careful consideration.

January Assembly.

Two very important motions relative to the assembly were submitted in the last assembly which met in January. The first one, proposed by Mr. Rind, read that the Assembly Committee shall have full power in centers and that such powers as they may adopt and impose shall be reported at the first regular assembly following such action. This motion came about because of the failure of the assembly to confer with men who were reported by the Dormitory Committee. The motion was tabled until the next meeting.

Mr. Watley proposed that the Constitution be amended to read that all men recommended by the Executive Committee for football K's and approved by the Assembly should be awarded K's. This motion was also tabled until the next meeting.

Mr. Timbakhaz urged all men to help the Reveille Board by handing in all good snapshots. After the report of the Executive Committee was accepted, the meeting adjourned.

Dr. Thompson, '38, is Dead.

With the death of the Rev. William Thompson, '38 Kenyon College alumnus, one of our best known and oldest alumni, News of the death of Dr. Thompson was received on Saturday, January 15, and the funeral services were held in the College chapel on January 17. In recognition of the life-long interest of the deceased in Kenyon College, the pall-bearers were chosen from the faculty and student body.

Dr. Thompson, who was born in 1834, graduated from Kenyon in 1858, then entering Bexley and later being ordained to the ministry. He received in 1860 the degree of Master of Arts from Kenyon. For eleven years he was rector of St. Paul's church in Mount Vernon, Ohio, later going to Pennsylvania, where he was a danae of President Hayes's, a lifetime portrait of President Hayes, by a prominent artist. This portrait, when finished, will be hung in Norton Hall.

Officers of the Club are sorry that only fourteen of the forty-four members were present at the unveiling, but "Dutch" McDowell, '38, assures us that when his young cannon arrives, he will have no trouble in musketing his gang in time to defend the Hill from any hostile foe.

That rare little flower, the dandelion, is becoming quite popular in scholastic circles. Nebraska University men have perfected an organization known as the "Dandelion Club." The purpose of the organization is to develop and encourage the sending of dandelions in place of expensive hot-house flowers to be worn by young ladies at formal parties.

"In Time of Peace Prepare For War." So says the new Kenyon Rifles Club charter, just received and placed in the Sterling Room. Officers of the Club are sorry that only fourteen of the forty-four members were present at the unveiling, but "Dutch" McDowell, '38, assures us that when his young cannon arrives, he will have no trouble in musketing his gang in time to defend the Hill from any hostile foe.
