The Facade

We think that there ought to be a method by which the Kenyon students and the administration could work in closer cooperation and understanding.

What is the problem? It is a mystery to the other group that there are so many things they can do without trying to take into consideration the conflicting viewpoints of each. Then, they are frustrated by the number of different versions of events that occur at faculty meetings, or edicts from the dean's office, or measures a student is required to take which have to do with the entire student body, which may be found in the newsletter around the Hill in a period of very few hours. Likewise, there is no way that the students' actions may be magnified into near-catastrophes before the listeners' listeners. There are friendly misunderstandings, all in all, the right hand does not know what the left hand is doing, and neither seems to care much about the other's activities. This is the problem that we want to say the least, and it leads to a lot of unnecessary complications.

One solution would be to say that the administration doesn't care about the students. We think that the only thing that is doable is to do everything to the best of one's ability. This optimistic outlook is partly justifiable because of the mystique that surrounds the administration's policies and actions, and also because we have become so much more confused, and we don't think about the problem.

The problem of student-administration relations is intricate, and the sharing of initiative is a necessity. Both groups could be held responsible for the body changes every four years. For this reason it is the responsibility of both groups to try and reach an understanding. Management for student government has been set up, but it doesn't seem to work at all. The student senator and the student scribe should sit on the opinion, have their opinions expressed in the College political news every week, and in the opinion of the administration, believe that there is reason to assume that the administration has a dictatorial attitude, but we have the feeling that this is a state of mind if it does exist more with the student body than with the administration. The administration is the one who should be aware of the student view if the student body is to have a voice in administration. Something must be done other than the fact that administration does do something which is contrary to the way the students think.

The blame rests directly upon the administration, the faculty members and the members of the senior council; the student body and the members of the senior council. We are committed to the belief that the administration has a very tough job to do. We are committed to the belief that the administration has a very tough job to do. We are committed to the belief that the administration has a very tough job to do.

Douglass Hot has an indefinable number of rooms. Sometimes, just for fun, several of its occupants plan to conduct an exploring party through the basement. The house is full and rambling, with footprints on the stairs and even the slate roof. From its upper windows a whole panorama of cosmopolitan life unfurls itself. Most active members of the Gamba set are the down youngsters on kiddie vehicles who charge at anyone daring enough to use the sidewalks. The Keggm Family are seen to be the most punctual mail carriers in Ohio. Dr. Laverlie, for instance, never fails to draw on in front of the post office at precisely 5:37 each morning.

Douglass men are very responsible and for the College’s sake they keep no night watchman. How they get along without an overweening eye is a matter for speculation. There is no lackey present, men have never failed to draw on in front of the post office at precisely 5:37 each morning.
