RHODES SCHOLARSHIPS TO REOPEN

Wingless Victory

Scores Success

Wingless Victory, presented on Thursday, August 30th, marked another success for Kenyon's Dramatic Club. The play, which was Anderson's most powerful, was performed before an audience which filled all the seats and even the aisles of Kenyon's Speech Building.

The role of the four principals was an especially important factor in the outcome of the production, although the very nature of Anderson's drama contributed heavily to its success. As is always the case, the skill of the unflagging hand of the director, Mrs. Helen Black, was everywhere to be seen.

The play dealt with the intolerance and bigotry of a New England town in its reactions with the dark-skinned Caleb princess, one of the slipper citizens brought back as a wife. The sea captain, Nathaniel McQuigon, and his wife Oparre were played by James Gradrner and Nell Foster, respectively. The plot, specifically opposed to the Malay princess in her mother-in-law, (Miss Lillian Chard) and the latter's dependents, is replicated in the same manner of the past. Three-year American women are admitted on this plan; they usually college graduates, but not in the sophomore class. The three junior scholarships pay almost all expenses, and selection in the U.S. is made by three. The first of the freshmen is the individual college which recommends students to a state committee composed of all past Rhodes Scholars. The state committee in turn recommends two men to the regional committee, and the latter elects four men a year.

A Glance Backward

Glancing back into several old volumes of the Colleges, I found in one an article written by a young girl in the late nineteenth century. The story concerned our present gymnasium, Rosie Hall, which formerly served as the college chapel. The account follows in a somewhat abbreviated form.

One Christmas eve, four young girls went to Rosie Hall to decorate the church for the Christmas service. To get some of the church decorations, one of the girls, Jill, the author of the story, climbed up a ladder to the gallery. As a prank, the other girls took away the ladder and left the church. Waiting for the girls to bring back the ladder, Jill heard a peculiar noise coming up the stairs. It became more distinct and sounded like chains dragging on the steps. Presently, she heard the footsteps of a man. He suddenly appeared out of the dark before her and drewl menacingly, "I like your eyes. They will taste well and slip down very easily." Terrified, she pressed back against the

This past week, on September 6th, another meeting of the J.R.C. examined the Chinese situation today. The members submitted that the prognosis for China was good, and that she had tremendous potentialities for becoming a great nation.

The International Relations Club has been reorganized with a unique system of rotating chairmen. This is necessary because of the demands of preparation: the meeting put on the discussion leader.

The three chairmen are Robert Golden, Stewart Perry, and Donald Waps.

INFERINARY HOURS

Mrs. Anne Jopling Lester, Matron of the infirmary, announces that starting immediately there will be definite hours for infirmary calls. Hitherto calls could have been made at any time, but they now must be from 9 to 11 every morning and from 1 to 2 and 4 to 5 in the afternoons.

As usual, Dr. Lee will be available at 11:15 in the afternoon every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Of course sick students with emergency cases will be admitted to the infirmary at any time.

The above mentioned schedule must be observed or otherwise the strain will be too great upon the Matron, who has done and is doing a splendid job in that often thankless position.

Mrs. Lester has also announced that the infirmary will not be open between terms this vacation as it has previously been.
