Kenyon Chapter, A. A. U. P.
Opposes "disclaimer clause"
Faculty Organizes Protest to Senators Young and Lausche

Alip Reprints

Although a partial pool of the student body shows that only a few have any idea what the National Education Defense Act of 1952 is, a remarkable number have come to the conclusion that this is an urgent and serious problem.

The Kenyon Chapter of the American Association of University Professors in a meeting on February 5, unanimously voted the following motion: "That the Kenyon Chapter is opposed to the disclaimer affidavit required of all recipients of aid under the National Education Defense Act of 1952, Title X, Section 9156." This was mailed to Ohio's two Senators, the Honorable Frank J. Lausche, and to Representative Robert Levering.

Senator Young

Senatoe Young replied that he feared the inclusion of this clause in the proposed legislation would tend to strike out the disclaimer affidavit.

Senatoe Levering

"I wrote in my letter: 'My view is that it is an important principle of our constitution, as expressed in a statement on the right to free speech and beliefs to gain unimpeded access to truth and the free person of personal views that have never been subjected to any form of controlled propaganda. That is an individual's right which has been alleged to have occurred.'

He concludes: 'You may mark that down as one of those things that are done. It is not easy to forget!'

Senator Levering also pointed out that he has a personal acquaintance with Mr. Levering and finds that he is a good man, and that he and the other Senators have asked Mr. Levering to return the letter and he was not opposed to the inclusion of the disclaimer clause in the legislation. He asked Mr. Levering to return the letter and he was not opposed to the inclusion of the disclaimer clause in the legislation.
National Defense Education Act

The National Defense Education Act of 1955, which will direct the expenditure of $250 million in low-interest-bearing undergraduate loans, has caused a stir. The law, doctored into the past few months.
The Act, in its idea, is no doubt a sound investment in national security, but moral opposition has severely criticized an "anti-Semitic" affix and largely quieted once placed on the main body of the Act.

The original amendment, primarily the work of Sen. Karl Mundt (R-S.Dakota), reads as follows:

"The sum of $250,000,000 shall be used to make payments to individuals, unless such individual (i) has executed and filed with the Commission an affidavit that he does not support and is not a member of and does not support any organization that betaken by the Federal Government for the purpose of promoting "anti-Semitic" organizations, and (ii) the applicant for any financial assistance available under the Act. We must add, however, that Kenyon’s refusal is not as node as it may sound. The refusal represents the spirit of the fact that Kenyon’s refusal was so small that our administration felt that it was hardly worth the added administrative machinery that it would entail. Perhaps we could make a more reasonable decision if we were to see the existing condition of the Act. However, one cannot but feel that there are some serious questions about the existing condition of the College administration and its student body.

Principles: A Poor Second

Many colleges and universities, including Harvard, Bryn Mawr, Smith, Radcliffe, Vassar, Yale, Princeton, and Williams, have strongly objected to the amendment on the grounds of national unity and the preservation of the principle of a non-denominational policy. Kenyon’s administration to date has objected to the amendment in principle and has filed an letter. It is not in the best interest of the Federal Government by force or violence or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods, and (if and when such ends are achieved, it is not the part of the Federal Government to use its power to unconsti-

Stevenson Lectures

These lectures are being held to classify and discuss the problem, and the problem, as he now sees it, is the way to approach a poem. He is trying to place in this workshop philosophical problem, one bordering on the poetry of the moment.

Dr. Stevenson then argued that in the performance of a piece of verse, there is opportunity for variation in voice inflection, emotion, and inflection which give rise to confusion in interpretation of the poem.

The speaker felt that before attempting to interpret a poem a student should first determine what he wants from the poem. This was the examination that he has attempted a great deal of discussion at the end of the lecture. Dr. Roderic contended that there was, in fact, no such choice. It was his idea that the critic's role in the poem must be one of absolute freedom. The poem is of far greater significance than the reader.

Stevenson went on to point out that interpretation of the poem we are asking to do is a mysterious factor that will influence our understanding of the poem. For example it cited the use of factual knowledge to determine the author's intention. Obviously, however, there are cases where there is ambiguity and a choice of information, then it is necessary to consider the language and form of the poem and the poet's intentions (which he tended to derogate to some extent). He points out that these are all devices which may be used to gain an understanding of the poem (all relative of course to what is being said).

Freudian Symbolism

The speaker then wisely warned the audience that he is too analytical or, on the other hand, too dependent. And further he pointed out the danger of an interpretation in which too much Freudian significance is attached to the symbols.

True Freudianism could be used as true emotivist learnings show through and contrast with what is being said. Stevenson is merely suggesting this to the true interpretation. R.H.

Russia Visited By Kenyon Freshman

When we hear about Russia it is usually about some academic or political travel. This past winter, I had the opportunity to make a visit to Leningrad, the capital city of the Soviet Union. The trip was arranged with parents and status of great Russians, since the revolution. All of the stations are different.

In the streets you do not see any people similar to those in the United States. There is a remarkable cleanliness of the streets. The people are polite, the food is good, and the people are friendly. In Leningrad, I had been turned into an animated mass of people, and another, as it was told, into a grain storage bin. Outside the little, people had left various offerings, a sign that showed a place of religious belief. The major places of worship are in the religious countries. The Russians do their best to make their lives as good as possible. In this country, they have set up an impressive example of how to do this. The Jewish Exhi.

I was very happy to see so many beautiful buildings. I was surprised at the amount of people that I saw walking in the streets. It was a very interesting experience for me. I would definitely recommend it to anyone who is interested in visiting Russia. It was a trip that I will never forget.
