It is customary that the first editorial to emerge from the collective pen of a new publications staff be dedicated to a statement of policy, aims, and hopes.

There is, in fact, not great a deal to say about the policy of the 1960-61 Collegian. In many ways, it will follow the path and spirit of its predecessor, the 1959-60 Collegian. Specifically, the Collegian will be concerned with a factual and current presentation of the news which might be of interest to our readers, the students, and the administration of Kenyon College.

However, equally important to the success of this publication is the interest which is taken in it by its readers themselves. "A Journal of Student Opinion," as we have been called, we cannot successfully operate without the help of contributors to each and every issue. The goal of this year's Collegian, is, in this regard, no different. We reside as individuals and as college students with the problem of publishing a newspaper. The scope of that problem is limited, and the Collegian may be of some service to a number of our readers.

We will encourage faculty criticism and comment concerning all phases of campus activity and thought. In short, this year with the help and criticism of you, our readers, we will do our level best to meet the needs and desires of all of Kenyon, and represent as accurately as possible, student opinion. J.R.B.
