The Proposed Dormitory

There are no two more crucial decisions in determining the image of Kenyon College than selecting the new Dean of the College and designing the dormitory. Through the process of selection, the College is able to communicate its image to the outside world. If the new Dean is not perceived as being worthy of the College's tradition, the work of the new Dean may be fruitless. On the other hand, if the College is able to attract an individual of outstanding ability, then the College will be able to advance forward into the future. A DORMITORY FOR SENIORS is clearly the most desirable type because the seniors contribute the most to the college. Instead of the year-round dormitory that has been the tradition in the past, the College should consider a dormitory that is only occupied by seniors. A dormitory that is only occupied by seniors would be more expensive to operate, but it would allow the College to focus its resources on the seniors, who are the most important group of students. The College should also consider the possibility of creating a dormitory that is only occupied by freshmen. Aristocratic Tradition?

FOREWORD

The yearbook REVEILLE strikes one's romantic instincts as being synchronous with the idea of the appropriation of editorial license to microscopically individual or group actions and to total obedience to an acceptable policy or more.

Images are composed of a multiply interrelated state and the application of image and alphabetic modes in dealing with copy. The use of these forms is obviously antithetical to the ideal and operations of a good yearbook; practice of such counsel, in justice, is misconceived by any student or college member keeping claim to self-respect.

“REVEILLE”Typography, auburn, and other such devices are applied, to force one to read, at least momentarily, at what Harry Humphreys has affectionately referred to with the title: Under these conditions, the individual-landscape system is of high enough standards, finds himself relegated to a genre of demonstration of this offensive yearbook. Humphreys’ fear of the “accusation of liberalism” is proven to be ill-illustrated in the “annual.”

*The 1963 REVEILLE tells us in page 19 that “first impressions are everything,” we nevertheless did not overcome in our (first) encounter (p. 19) with the yearbook: you can always tell a book by its cover, but in this instance you can. Sickening. With a “heart of salt” (p. 19) we opened the pages to “pay our heartfelt respect and sympathy to the memory of Robert Proft,” (The American Post-Laureate, 22, 19). Although the REVEILLE has “assumed a new external face” (p. 14) its ‘inherent dignity’ has been maintained. Many are grieved that the REVEILLE can ‘comprehend the merit of an aristocratic tradition’ (p. 29). To say that the 1963 REVEILLE is an improvement over last year’s is indistinguishable; but then that is to say that anything is better than nothing. The only notable difference is in the superior quality of the photography.

Humphreys admits a “wielder of social culture in these hands of the ‘decade state’,” and that “the year was memorable for the many prominent figures—literary, academician, and entertainers—who illuminated the Gambier scene.” Evidently he is more concerned with the “entertainment” aspects of Kuyper: The Year in Recreation section does not, as Humphreys promised, accurrately capture the spirit of College Life. One should hope that the past year has offered something more interesting than the metal into Humphreys has preserved. We also wonder just how accurately the non-academic was represented. Was it the last time you saw three naked girls reviving in the Gambier store? Humphreys’ rainy season credit, however, for reducing the number of pictures featuring occasions generally gives an almost undeniably ironic line of that nature: Liquor bottle, nose cups and caps, and glasses to 85. Remarkable progress.

We can well imagine that conservatice Harry was chagrined by the question: a pre-senior speaker, who supposedly “professed philosophical hall.” That narrow-minded Harry was disinterested by “an indigeneus trimester from Muscoviticum” (210) the finest country. Harry supported students who allegedly “gloriously turned ‘peep night’ into a Collegian burning ceremony.” And that aristocratic Harry had to commend to the “beaugeois” music of the Russian Quartet from Russia.

We nevertheless question his freedom to print his petty gripes and opinions in a book which should be objective. If the Publications Board is looking for a case worth investigating, we refer to it the 1963 REVEILLE.
